The SHADOW of the "SPENDTHRIFT!"

See the Spendthrift! Oh! woe betide, he throws his money from side to side, squandering, squandering, as he goes; nor stops to think as he wildly sows, of the harvest of want he will have to reap, when the aging years their shadows creep, and throw their gloom across his way, when youth has fled and his hair is gray. Oh! take this lesson to your heart dear friend, nor from the saving path depart, for as surely follows night the day, the spendthrift has his price to pay, for follies, and for wicked waste, the cup of rue he's forced to taste.
