The Cork Oak.

The growth of cork-oak in California is not a matter of experiment; its success was demonstrated long ago. The distribution of cork-acorns by the Patent Office about twenty-five years ago may not have accomplished much in other parts of the country, but it gave us a start, and there are now trees yielding cork and bearing acorns at a number of different places in the State. There are trees growing on Mr. Richardson's place at San Gabriel. There were samples of cork and acorns shown at the Sacramento Citrus Fair by H. A. Messenger, of Calaveras County, there are trees of similar age in Sonoma, Santa Barbara and Tulare, and perhaps other counties. The State University is growing seedlings from California cork acorns, and will be likely to have the trees for distribution next year. There is no doubt about the adaptation of the tree to the State as the widely separated places named above all furnish proper conditions for its growth. It is of course a crop of which one has to wait some time to gather, and therefore needs patience in the planter.

All the corkwood of commerce comes from the Spanish Peninsula, where the trees abound not only in cultivated forests but also grow wild on the mountains. The tree is like an American oak, with leaves similar to the oak and acorns. It takes ten years for the bark to become a proper thickness to be manufactured into bottle stoppers, life preservers and seine corks. When stripped from the tree it is to be boiled for two hours, cured in the sun for a week and pressed into flat pieces for bailing and shipping. The denuded trunk, like a hen robbed of her eggs, does not sulk and quit the business, but throws out a fresh covering for afresh spoliation. The tree has been known to yield half a ton of corkwood. One pound of cork can be manufactured into 144 champagne corks. The baled cork bark is sold to cork manufacturing centres. The most extensive manufactory in America is at Pittsburg. Besides the ordinary demands for cork bark, a good supply of the buoyant material, after being burned, to make it still lighter than the original bark, is shipped to Canada and New England, where it is made into seine corks. The average annual importation of corkwood into this country, entirely at the port of New York, is 70,000 bales a year. A bale weighs 160 pounds, and is worth on this side of the water $20, making a total value of the importations of $1,400,000. It comes in duty free.—Pacific Rural Press.

Dairy Tests.

There is murmuring along the line that the test business among cows is being overdone. The death of several remarkable animals soon after completing their great records has led some men to argue that such forcing was necessarily dangerous; some go as far as to call it cruelty. One writer points out what the average yield of dairy cows is, to show by comparison what a strain these must have been subjected to that have made such large records. While we are opposed to "slopping over" in any direction, and are ready to prevent cruelty in every possible instance, we feel inclined to offer a few arguments on the other side of this question.

We have not seen in accounts of the death of these famous cows any strong evidence that death was the result of high feeding, unless it was in the case of Mercedes, and she was at the critical point of parturition when it is dangerous to rush any cow with high feed. Many other cows not so famous nor so highly fed have died under the same conditions, but the world did not hear of it. Where is the "forcing?" The cow was not obliged to eat more than she wanted. Where is cruelty? The cow was kept quiet and comfortable and was well cared for, and the milk was drawn often enough to relieve the udder from undue expansion. Compare this treatment with the course of training animals have to endure to fit them for trial of speed or draft. Cruelty to keep a cow comfortable and give her all she can eat? Cruelty to take ninety or one hundred pounds of milk from a cow in a day when her appetite and digestion and secretive organs are all favorably united for its production?

We hear no complaint of cruelty where cows are fattened for the butcher. It has been argued that a cow was capable of giving a certain amount of milk and that high feeding shortened her period of usefulness. Why not say that a stove is capable of making just so much ashes, or of giving out just so much heat, when it all depends on what and how much is put into it?

But even if this assumption is true we keep cows for what we can get out of them, and if we can get their full yield in five years, it saves much time and labor over taking ten years for it.

When these large records were first published, a certain class of writers were ready to advertise their stupidity by questioning their truthfulness; and this cry of over-feeding and dangerous forcing seems like a branch of the same idea, which is simply this: Some one has a better cow or a better breed than we have but we don't want to admit it.—Practical Farmer.

And cast an anxious eye
To that unhappy bank beyond,

Where They Get The Scalps.

A good many years ago when an Omaha militia company went out on the plains the bottle-scarred warriors failed to find a single hostile Sioux whose scalp they could take with propriety. So they turned in to get their trophies from their own camp, and gallantly cut the ears off two or three Pawnee bucks who accompanied the militia as guides. These ears were brought back to Omaha as proof of the daring and bravery of our volunteer protectors, and although the Pawnee ears were not large enough to cover them with glory, they served their purpose, for a time at least, until it leaked out that they had never ornamented the head of a Sioux brave.

The Colorado militia are evidently taking their pattern from the renowned Omaha scouts of '64, and we shall not be surprised if their trophies prove to be nothing more than the ears of some inoffensive Indians who happened to be on trail of the militia.—Omaha Bee.

Washington has finally been chosen as the site of the university which so many learned and devout Roman Catholic clergymen have long desired to see established in this country. From various points of view the selection is admirable. A college at the capital of the Nation cannot fail to increase the respect felt for the Church among all who visit it—that is, if it really is a fine institution, both in its buildings and faculties. This condition seems to be recognized by the priests, bishops and laymen directly interested in the scheme, and already nearly a million has been raised to carry on the work. The project must have the best wishes not only of Catholics but of tolerant men or all shades of religious belief.

Says a correspondent of The Louisville Courier Journal: "There are many large buildings and evidences of wealth in Kansas City, calculated to impress the casual observer, but if he stays here a little while he will discover that nearly all of them are owned by people in the east. All the great cable car lines are owned by Boston capitalists who never come out here, save to take an occasional look at their property. Boston is the heaviest holder of Kansas City property, and owns many of the large buildings and much real estate. New York comes in for a big share, and nearly every large city in the east has investments here."

It is gratifying to learn that the notorious Johann Most has been denied citizenship in this country. The clerk of the superior court in New York, to whom Most applied to declare his intentions, seems to have some adequate conception of the importance of his functions. He put questions to the anarchist which elicited the statement that he should feel it his duty to use force in resisting the authorities, whenever they should attempt to enforce laws which he might regard as detrimental to the people. On this declaration the clerk refused to administer the oath of allegiance. He will try again.

A young Persian nobleman by the name of Hassan Dshenedi arrived recently at Warsaw, after traveling the entire distance from Teheran to Warsaw on foot. He had made a wager to walk from Teheran to Paris in eight months, and has so far consumed six and one-half months on his trip. From Moscow to Warsaw he walked along the railroad track. He has no traveling companion; the guarantee for the faithful performance of the undertaking lies in a sacred oath taken by him before starting, which binds him to use no conveyance of any kind.

Mr. Cross of Westerly, R. I., has in his possession a tall eight-day clock, which belonged to Commodore Vanderbilt's mother, and stood in the kitchen of the old birth place on Staten Island. From the depths of that clock, which old Mrs. Vanderbilt used as a savings bank, she took $100 of hard-saved money and gave it to young Cornelius to start in business. That $100 was the foundation of the Vanderbilt millions. Mr. Cross married a daughter of Commodore Vanderbilt, and the old clock was her share of the household furniture.

A new and picturesque branch of business has been established at Calera, Alabama. An enterprising colored gentleman of that place gets bitten by a rattlesnake "on purpose" at 50 cents a bite. This done, he promptly proceeds to render the bite harmless by an external application of a clay poultice and an internal big drink of whiskey accentuated with plug tobacco. If the supply of snakes holds out there is no reason why the man should not acquire wealth and fame enough to satisfy him.

Judge "Tom" Hughes is now on a visit to the English college at Rugby, Tenn. He is fairly contented with the success of his colonization scheme, but still hopes for bigger things. Before returning to England, Judge Hughes will go to Kansas to visit a son who lives there, and will also stay a few days in New York. His health is excellent, and he is the same genial man that he has always been. If he is growing old no one would suspect it.
