The Volunteer Organist.

The great big church was crowded full we sensibleish and we sitz,
An' sattin rich as cream that grows on our ol' brindle's milk;
Shinel hoops, tinsel skirts, stiff dickeys, an' store-pipe hats were there,
An' decide 'tin circumstances so tight they couldn's kneel down in prayer.

The elder in his pooplit high, solid, as he slowly rose,
"O ye whisht is hep' to hum, laid up 'th roo mats,
An' as we here so sybaitical, as Brother Moore ain't here,
Will some 'un in the congregation be so kind's to volunteer?"

An' then a red-nosed, drunken tramp of low blood rose, wry style
Give an Episcopacy bishop, an' then stagered up the aisle.
Then thro' that holy atmosphere there crep' a sense of awe;
An' there' thet air of sanctity the odor uv ol' gin.

Then Deacon Purrington he yelled, his teeth all set on edge,
"This man purfanes the house er God! Wy this is sacrilege!"
The tramp didn't hear a word he said, but slowly 'th sensible feet,
An' sprawled an' staggered up the steps, an' pulled the organ seat.

He then pawed piano' the keys, an' soon there rose a strain
That opened open bulgs oth the heart, an' lectrify them pain
An' then he slipped down on the thing 'th hands an' legs an' knees,
He slam-dashed his hull body down kerflop upon the keys.

The organ roared, the music flood went sweepin' high an' cry,
It swelled into the rafters and bulged out into the sky;
The ol' church shook an' staggered, an' seemed to reel an' sway,
An' the elder shouted "Glory!" an' I yelled out "Hooray!"

An' then he tried a tender strain that melted in our ears,
Thet brought up blessed memories an'drenched 'em down 'th tears;
An' we dreamed of ol'-time kitchens, 'th Tabby on the mat,
Uv home an' luv an' baby-days, an' mother an' all that!

An' then he struck a streak uv hope—a song from sonie forgiven—
Thet burst from the prison bars uv sin, an stormed the gates of Heaven;
The mornin' stars they sang together—no soul was left alone—
We felt the universe wuz safe, an' God was on His throne!

An' then a wail uv deep despair an' darkness come again,
An' long, black crape hung on the doors uv all the homes uv pain;
No luv, no light, no joy, no hope, no songs uv glad delight,
An' then—the tramp he staggered down an' reeled into the night!

But we knew how he'd tell his story, tho' he never spoke a word,
An' it was the saddest story that our ears had ever heard;
He had lost his own child history, an' no eye was dry that day,
When the elder rose an' simply said: "My brethren, let us pray."

—S. W. Foss in the Yankee Blade

A YOUNG WIFE'S LESSON.

"Indeed, Charley, I don't think you ought to expect it of me!"

Clara Arden stood coloring, and evidently annoyed, in the midst of her pretty little drawing room, while her husband leaned against one of the puffed damask chairs, pulling unconsciously at his long beard.

"It won't be much, Clare," said he. "Fenwick is too sensible a fellow to expect any great performances from a young housekeeper as you are."

"That's all nonsense!" said Mrs. Arden.

"Yes, but Clare, darling"—

"There's no use in wasting any further argument on the question," said Clara,—setting her lips together; "When you invited him to dinner without consulting me, you made a very great mistake."

"But what am I to do? I've asked him and there is no alternative."

"Yes there is. Do as other gentlemen do, and invite him to some restaurant—that is, if you must keep this heathenish engagement!"

"But I never did such a thing in my life before!" said perplexed Charley.

"And I hope you never will again!" retorted Mrs. Arden, with some asperity. "That is, so far as inviting people without any sort of forethought goes!"

The color rose to Charles Arden's cheek.

"Clare," said he, "if you had asked a dozen people here, my only thought would be how best to welcome them."

"You are not a housekeeper," said Clara, coldly, "with a sick cook and everything in disorder."

"Pshaw!" said Mr. Arden, as he went out, closing the door behind him with more emphasis than was jealously necessary.

"Men are so selfish, so inconsiderate!" she said to herself, "I would brave the criticism of Oscar Fenwick, who has dined at Paris restaurants, and knows all about aristocratic families, where they keep men cooks and butlers and regular dining room servants. It's quite out of the question, and so Charles may as well understand first as last. If Bridget hadn't been ill with the intermittent fever, I might, perhaps, have tried to get up a dainty little dinner; but as it is, no one but a man would expect it of me."

So Mrs. Arden adjusted her pretty shining braids of brown hair in the glass, and nestled down in the corner of the sofa, to forget the wearisome trials and vicissitudes of real life in the pages of the morning papers.

It was late in the afternoon when a visitor was announced, with rather startling abruptness, by the red-armed maid-of-work, who was trying to supply the vacant place of the disabled Bridget according to the best of her ability.

"Please, mem, it's Mrs. Marley!"

Clara started up half ashamed of being caught in her morning robe so late in the day.

"If it was any one but you, Mrs. Marley," said she, laughing and blushing, "I should apologize for my shortcomings. As it is, you are just in time to take off your things and stay to dinner with me. I am alone to-night, and your society will be a real charity."

"Why, where is your husband?" asked the visitor in surprise.

"Dining out."

"Where?"

"I don't know. The fact is, he met an old college friend this morning and in a burst of inconsiderate hospitality—so like a man, you know—invited him to dinner. Of course, I refused to ratify the invitation. What could I do, with Bridget ill in bed? So I told him he must take his friend to a restaurant or some such place, and I assented with rather a bad grace, I assure you, to his plan. Here I am, alone."

Mrs. Marley was a pretty, fair complexioned, elderly lady, with hair as white as snow. One of those gentle, helpful, motherly sort of persons, who are invaluable to their friends. She shook her head as she listened to Mrs. Arden's story.

"Don't you think I did right?" Clara asked, impulsively. "Just consider how I am situated!"

"It would have been some trouble and responsibility," said Mrs. Marley, "to superintend the preparation of such a meal as you would like your husband's guest to sit down to but I think I should have advised you to try."

"But why?"

"In the first place, as a compliment to your husband."

Clara shrugged her shoulders.

"We are old married people now," said she. "Only think, it is nearly three years since our wedding day—and all this sentimental billing and cooing is worn out."

"Real sentiment between husband and wife should never wear out," said Mrs. Marley, mildly. "Depend upon it, my love, your husband will appreciate any little attention now quite as much as in the days of your engaged life. But that is not all. Let me tell you an experience of my own. I had a brother once—a very dear brother. He died of delirium tremens."

"Oh, Mrs. Marley!" Clara Arden placed a sympathetic hand in that of her friend, for she saw that the pretty old lady had grown pale, and trembled.

"Yes, my dear," went on Mrs. Marley. "He had a gay, pretty young wife, who disliked the cares of housekeeping, and it never came to understood thing between them that any gentleman guests whom it fell to Clement's lot to entertain should be taken to some hotel or restaurant. Well, my dear, you know how it was. The wine flowed freely—there was no feminine presence to restrain the false idea of good-fellowship. Clement acquired the fatal habit of indiscriminate drinking, and the upshot of it all was that he died a drunkard's grave. Perhaps I was uncharitable, but I have always thought that had his wife made her home agreeable to her husband and his guests things might have ended differently."

"But, Mrs. Marley," cried Clara, much shocked, "this is quite a different thing!"

"I do not say that it is not. Clara. I only want to warn you against the rock on which my poor sister-in-law's life was wrecked.. Of what use is all our sad and hardly won experience, if not to caution other little?"

Clara was silent for a minute or two, and when she spoke again it was on quite a different topic. Mrs. Marley stayed and dined with her off the cold joint and simple salad, and went home at about 8 o'clock.

And then came the long, lonely evening, during which Clara sat by the window, waiting and listening for every sound, nervously impatient for her husband's return.

"Of course, he is not the sort of man to drink too much," she told herself, over and over again; "but—but I am almost sorry I was so obstinate about asking Mr. Fenwick to dinner. It would not have been so very much trouble, after all, and I think Charley was vexed about it."

Nine o'clock struck—then 10—then 11—and Clara sprang up and began pacing the room in her nervousness.

"I wish he would come!" she cried, wringing her hands. "I wish he would come!"

Just then there was some disturbance in the street, and she ran half afraids to escape from her own harassing thoughts, Clara threw open the window and thrust out her head.

There was a little crowd at the corner of the street, and she could distinctly hear the jeering voices of some of the little street Arabs crying out: "It's only a drunken man! Hallo, mister, you'll find your hat in the gutter! Can't you tell us where you live? Go and ask an officer!"

"Clara's head turned cold as ice. Could it be possible? Was this poor, staggering creature, whose uncertain step afforded amusement to a mob of boys, her noble husband? Had he so far forgotten himself and her? And if so, at whose door lay the fault?

Nearer and nearer came the little crowd. Clara drew in her head and closed the window. She could not bear to have the dreadful possibility confirmed. She stopped her ears; she buried her face in the pillows of the sofa.

"Why, Clara, little wife, what's the matter?"

It was Charley's voice—not the maudlin accents of semi-intoxication, but the full, deep tones of the man she felt she could yet honor as well as love and obey. She looked up with a little hysterical laugh.

"Oh, Charley, I was frightened. A drunken man in the street, you know—"

"Yes—I passed him. A policeman has just walked him off to the station house. So you were frightened, eh?"

Clara's face was radiant as she turned up the low jet of gas.

"I am so glad you have come, Charley!" said she. "I have had a great many compunctions of conscience this afternoon, because I didn't invite Mr. Fenwick welcome to the best I had in the house instead of sending you to a restaurant."

"We went to Lemonde's," said Charley. "The dinner was stylish enough, but nothing better than you could have given us at home."

"And, Charley," added Clara, softly, "the next time you invite a friend to dine with you, you may be certain that my welcome will be ready."

"That's my own dear little Clara," said Charley. And the hearty satisfaction in his face was a reward for any sacrifice she might be called upon to make. "A fellow likes to feel, you know, when he meets an old chum, that he has a home to ask him to, and a wife that will meet him with a smile."

"But I am sorry about Mr. Fenwick!"

"Never mind. He will be in town again one of these days, and then we'll show him what a home-made dinner is—eh, Clara?"

And Clara's smile answered him.

She had her lesson.

Rudyard Kipling.

Rudyard Kipling has, undoubtedly, taken literary London by storm and wherever I went his name was brought up. Londoners regard him as the coming man and the attention he is attracting will, unless he has a well balanced head, spoil him personally and in a literary way. Kipling is 24 years old, very gaunt, tall, then well, and is made the center of every group wherever he goes. He has popular manners and while English women concede that he is not handsome, they allow, as one woman confided to me, that "he is striking-looking and attractive." He weighs in against him. He is shortsighted, and at times has great ocular trouble. He babbles over with vivacity, tells an exceedingly good story, either in parlor or at the club, and has a quickness about him that is very attractive to the listener. He does not seek especially for the approval of woman, and prefers the society of men. If he were to work steadily for the literary market, and every book in the day and night it would be impossible for him to fill his orders. I hadn' one editor who offered Kipling £100 ($500) for a short Christmas story, and the offer was declined. He writes every day, but does not allow himself to write more than five or six hours. Then he goes to the club, enjoys a good dinner, and would rather face the Devil himself than the wretched literary reception in London. Every body in England concedes that he is clever. The question is, will he last? Can he, at 24, stand his success?

—Edward W. Bok.

Etymological.

It is said that the word "calculate" is derived from the Latin word "calculus," a pebble, as pebbles were used in early times as a means of reckoning. This is clearly wrong. As a matter of fact (as may be determined by inquiry among well-informed New Englanders) the word is properly "cracklelate" and its meaning is "to guess." It is di ectly derived from the word "crackle" and arose from the habit of guessing at sewing circles and quilting-bees the cost of the parson's wife's new bonnet.

When the railway across Siberia is completed, it is estimated that the tour of the world in fifty days will be feasible.

SOUTHFIELD ROAD.

There is much sickness prevalent in the neighborhood at present.

Stuart Reid is not improving very fast from the kick of a horse which he received about Christmas. They had a consultation of doctors on Tuesday.

A dancing party was held a Louis Hasck's last Friday night.

Alex Bell is still failing.

Louis Hasck's little boy has inflammation of the lungs.

The young people gathered at Matthew Erwin's last Friday evening until the house was filled, and a very pleasant evening was passed.

Mrs Wm. Young is in very poor health at present.

A daughter of John Stoll was buried Sunday. She died of diphtheria.

Purdy Bros. have got their new feed mill in working order.

Geo. Stell is improving slowly.

BIG BEAVER BLIZZARDS.

Our school is in a flourishing condition.

What is the matter with all our meat wagons? Looks as though they were all fair weather peddlers.

What has become of the Gazette and Sentinel correspondents?

Dr. Ross, of Virginia, was in town recently sizing up the town with a view to locating.

The Red Ribbon Reform Club at their semi annual meeting elected the following officers: President, A. A. Gibbs; vice president, Mrs. S. L. Robbins; secretary, Miss Carrie Bingham; financial secretary Miss Minnie Gillett; treasurer, Mr. E. W. Millard; sergeant-at-arms, Mr. A. C. Aspinwall; steward, Mr. Ed Lamb; organist, Miss Frankie Gibbs.

Mr and Mrs. L. J. Philleo, of Chicago, who have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Travis the past four weeks returned home last Tuesday. Mrs. Philleo is a sister of C. S. Travis.

The masquerade ball last Friday evening, at the hall, in point of numbers at least, was a success, the hall being taxed to its utmost to accommodate the dancers. It is surprising, however, how many people can dance all night without getting hungry, as out of over a hundred dancers only about thirty partook of the excellent supper provided by Messrs Smith and Epling. Not much encouragement for any one to prepare refreshments for dancers in this locality.

The Red Ribbon Reform Club will give an entertainment at their hall consisting of literary and musical exercises, followed by a supper, on Tuesday evening, January 27. The exercises will close with a cold water concert by a number of children under the supervision of the organist, Miss Frankie Gibbs and our popular school teacher Miss Minnie Gillett. This is expected to be the event of the season and will well repay a visit to the hall. Admission to the entertainment will be ten cents for adults, five cents for children, except small ones, who will be admitted free. The suppers prepared by the ladies, are so well known that comment is unnecessary. We hope and expect to see the hall crowded!

A SAFE INVESTMENT.

As one which is guaranteed to bring you satisfactory results, or in case of failure a return of purchase price. On this safe plan you can buy from our advertised druggist a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption. It is guaranteed to bring relief in every case when used for any affection of the throat, lungs or chest, such as consumption, inflammation of the lungs, bronchitis, asthma, whooping cough, croup, etc., etc. It is pleasant and agreeable to taste, perfectly safe and can always be depended upon. Trial bottles free at Whitehead & Mitchell's.

The number of species of humming-birds now known to exist exceedingly exceeds 400. The largest among them measures no more than eight and one-half inches, and the least two and three-eighths inches.

In Chili weddings are not exactly gay affairs. According to a decree of the archbishop of Santiago all bridesmaids in Chili must dress in black. White gloves and veils are permitted them, but no colors are allowed.

The man thief suspects his neighbors and so bars up against them. The magpie, as though self-conscious that its own thieving habits may be imitated by its neighbors, surrounds its nest with a hedge of thorns.

The savage is like the civilized; he has his weak points. Believing himself to be descended from, and therefore akin to, his totem, the savage naturally treats it with respect. If it is an animal, he will not, as a rule, kill or eat it.

W. D. Howells' new novel is called "An Imperative Duty." It will make its first appearance as a serial in one of the Harper periodicals. A new work from Howells is one of the events in the literary world to be considered of interest.

There has been placed on exhibition at the Libby Prison museum in Atlanta, Ga., among the relics of President Andrew Johnson, the old book in which he kept all of his accounts while he was tailoring business at Greeneville, Tenn.

To fell a large mahogany tree is one day's task for a few men. On account of the wide spurs which project from the trunk at its base, scaffolds have to be erected and the tree cut off above the spurs, which leaves a stump from six to fifteen feet high—a waste of the very best wood.

It is the meat eaters who suffer when they go down to the sea in ships. The curious discovery has recently been made that vegetarians are never affected with seasickness. M. Ghady says that persons who have never eaten meat are proof against the poison of the most venomous serpents.

An eastern item says: Little kerosene lamps, made to fit in ordinary silver candlesticks, are in demand for rich men's tables. They are displacing candles because they give more light, don't set fire to the fancy shades, don't smoke or burn out quickly—and because they are the fashion.

A New York letter says: Certain New York fruit stores have been selling good-looking women as bill collectors. So far the scheme has been unsuccessful. Three of the women married inside of a week and four more are engaged, while the balance sympathize with the poor fellows who have run into debt, and have not collected a cent.

There is one commendable feature about the old world—it takes time to be respectful to the dead. In Paris, when a funeral is passing, persons in view of the procession remove their hats and remain uncovered until it passes, and in London, Berlin, Vienna, Rome and other important cities funerals are treated with respectful consideration.

THANKS.

We take this manner of announcing to our many friends that we are indebted to them for a prosperous year of trade and business relations— in fact we feel proud to say that the past year can be looked upon as altogether successful in every position, and we feel that we owe our success to the early friends and patrons who have made our business what it has been. We look over the past with a great amount of pleasure and in some instances know we would do differently. Who can say they would not if the past could be recalled? Wishing everybody the coming year a prosperous and happy life. We are your friends,

Whitehead & Mitchell,
BIRMINGHAM, - - - MICH.

ELECTRIC BITTERS.

This remedy is becoming so well known and so popular as to need no special mention. All who have used Electric Bitters sing the same song of praise.—A purer medicine does not exist and it is guaranteed to do all that is claimed. Electric Bitters will cure all diseases of the Liver and Kidneys, will remove Pimples, Boils, Salt Rheum and other affections caused by impure blood. Will drive Malaria from the system and prevent as well as cure all Malarial fevers. —For cure of Headache, Constipation and Indigestion try Electric Bitters.—Entire satisfaction guaranteed, or money refunded.—Price 50 cts. and $1.00 per bottle at Whitehead & Mitchell's drug store. 19

LINUS D. FINN,
UNDERTAKER AND EMBALMER,
ROYAL OAK, - MICH.

A complete stock of Caskets, Coffins, Robes, Italian Wheat, and Hardware always kept in stock. No ICE USED, but the latest, best, cheapest and most natural way of taking care of bodies used. I will furnish a WHITE HEARSE to all who so desire at no extra expense. Carriages secured when so desired at a low cost.

No Monopoly Prices.

Yours respectfully,
L. D. FINN.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and spicy news. No Sporting Report, Barber or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00.

Send Five Cents for sample copy.

RICHARD K. FOX,
Franklin Square, New York City.

GOLD, SILVER AND NICKEL PLATING DONE TO ORDER.—Having just received all necessary material and tools for doing the above work, and with five years experience at the business, I am now prepared to do all kinds of plating at very reasonable rates. I can guarantee work equal the best and at prices far below the prices of any other place.

W. HEAVENER & CO, Royal Oak, Mich. Near U. P. Church.

Solid Gold Genuine Diamonds, Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Spectacles, Eyeglasses, Gold Pens, Pencils, Tables, Clocks, Watches