Fantastic Effects of Music.

She twankled a tune on her light guitar,
A low sweet gang-of-fangled sounds,
And burred as the voices of fairies are,
Dancing in the moonbeams clads and downs;
And the tinkling dip of the strange refrain
Ran o'er the rim of my soul like rain.

The great blonde moon in the midnight skies
Paused and peered over the trellis eaves
And the stars in the light of her upturned eyes
Sifted their lives through the gifted leaves,
Glinted and splintered in ecstasy mist
Down the glittering string that her finger kissed.

Oh, the melody mad! Oh, the tinkle and thrill
Of the ecstacy of the queen-thing!
The red rose dropped from her window sill
And lay in a hot sun-quivering;
While the dying notes of the strain divine
Rippling in grace up my spellbound spine.

The Open Sea.

With sails outspread, beneath thee Northern skies,
Have stalwart men endured the stinging blast,
Whose freezing breath would hold the vessel fast
To icy coasts, from which no heart no eyes
For aid, while each man feeds the unknown "Rise!"
Cut through the Tartary, cut we skim our mast
Toward the open sea, in which at last
We'll anchor as our ship is safely face."

And on, earth-bound, chart thought on thought sojourn
Cleaving the frozen shores that hold the mind
By all the links, which in the flesh still bind
The truth, unknown in all its full desire.
But while I wait I hear the fleet drawn over,
"My gate is unclose to and the open sea."

Loading Bullets With Air.

Wm. F. Chamberlain, of Norwich, Conn., has, after fourteen years of experimenting, devised what he calls a "perfect air gun." The term is a misnomer, as the invention does not relate to guns but to projectiles. Mr. Chamberlain does not load a gun with air, but he loads the bullet, and he thinks the invention would do away with the use of gunpowder. The various parts of Mr. Chamberlain's bullets are three in number. The exterior of the projectile is a hollow steel shell. Part way is a steel end-piece, which screws into the shell, leaving the chamber above the end-piece to be charged with air. The end-piece is hollow except at the upper end, and has four equidistant air holes at a point on its stem. A steel pin fits exactly into the hollow of the end piece, the end of the pin being flush with the bottom of the bullet when it is ready for use. It is held in place, when the bullet is charged, by a delicate wire penetrating the rim of the end piece. In charging the bullet with air the end piece is screwed in tight, and air is forced into the chamber by an air engine invented by Mr. Chamberlain. The pin is then sent in and the wire is fastened. The bullet may be fired in any breech-loading gun of the right bore. The fall of the gun hammer breaks the wire holding the steel pin, and drives the pin past the air holes, the air charge rushes out around the smaller end of the pin against the gun breech, and the bullet is hurled from the gun. The report of the air discharge is correspondingly louder than that of powder. By adaptation of the same principles a cartridge is made for throwing darts.

The air-charged bullet, Mr. Chamberlain says, may be made to fit the smallest rifle or the largest cannon. The velocity with which it is thrown depends, of course, entirely on the pressure of air with which it is loaded. Mr. Chamberlain has fired a rifle bullet, loaded with 100 pound air pressure, half a mile accurately. The shells will stand, he says, 1,000 pounds pressure. He proposes to make cannon balls that may be fired thirteen or fourteen miles, the long-range possibilities of the projectile being limited only by the cohesive power of the steel. He avers that his charged projectiles are ready for use after any lapse of time, and that there is no danger of the bursting of the piece, as over-pressure of air merely starts a seam in the metal, instead of shivering it. For rifle or musket shooting a leaden bullet is used.

About Pools.

"Stranger," he began, as he shoved his hat back on his head and sat down on a trunk on the platform, "what is this 'ere about these 'ere railroad pools?"

"How?"

"Wall, then, what is a railroad pool?"

"Why, a number of railroad lines put all their earnings into a bag, shake it up and divide even."

"What's that fur?"

"So that all can get a whack at business."

"An' its accordin' to law?"

"Yes."

The man pulled his hat down, rested his elbows on his knees for a "think," which lasted three or four minutes, and then suddenly arose and said:

"Stranger, I've been a tarnal fool!"

"How?"

"Why, thar's a chap livin' nex' door to me at hum who has allus worked four hours to my one, and who earns a dollar to my quarter, and it never occurred to me to make him pool our wages and whack up." Wall Street News.

Mr. Charles Barrett, of Ashburnham, Mass., is 96 years old. In 1846, when he was 58 years old, he was insured for $1,000 in one of the best known life insurance companies. The policy was payable at death only, but within a few days Mr. Barrett has received a check from the company for the full amount of the policy together with the dividend for the current year. In transmitting the check the president of the company writes that Mr. Barrett is the only member of that company who has outlived the mortality table, and that there has not been a similar instance of longevity in any other company in this country.

A great many clerkships and public offices now being filled with hoodlums might with much more decency be held by women. A woman employed in an office would not be smoking a cigar with her feet up on a desk when a citizen visits the office for business or information.—N. O. Picayune.

He Had a Plan.

A German tailor in a village in Canada failed a few days ago and called a meeting of his creditors. An investigation seemed to show that his liabilities were $1,000 and his assets $1,000.

"It thus appears," said one of the creditors, "that you can pay 25 cents on the dollar."

"Vhell, I don't figure like dot," replied the tailor.

"How do you figure?"

"Vhy, I pay twenty cents on der dollar."

"How can you do that when your assets only allow for one-fourth?"

"Vhell, I buy de oder money down from der house."

He was not permitted to fail. Wall Street News.

Miss Maria Moon, of Elkton, Md., has broken off her engagement with her betrothed, because the latter wished to postpone their wedding a year until the bill reducing the price of marriage licenses should become a law. The present rate is $1.50, and the proposed law reduces it to 60 cents. It has not yet passed the Legislature, however.

WORTH REMEMBERING.

To the People of Oakland, Lapeer, Macomb and Washtenaw Counties.

LADIES and GENTLEMEN. I have a word to say this spring. I have been to New York and returned with a very large stock of new goods, and have no hesitation in pronouncing it the largest, handsomest, finest, newest, most extensive, and very much the most elegant stock of Dry Goods in the county. You may be tempted to ask me, Why so? My reply is briefly this, and as Sam Weller would say, "It's a self-evident proposition, I AM THE ONLY DRY GOODS MAN WHO HAS BEEN TO THE EASTERN MARKETS THIS SPRING from Pontiac, and how can people be up to the mark who do not go to New York every spring and fall. Besides, the public know whose sidewalk has been crowded with freight this season, where to look for new goods, Dry Goods and Carpets upstairs and down is our motto, and Low Prices our pass word to the public. The marshal called the other day and ordered us 60 packing cases from the sidewalk. Ask the draymen and the railroad officials who are receiving the new goods this spring, and the reply will be "The Beehive leads in the race." Call and we will convince you we mean business, first, last and all the time I am, etc., Your Respectfully,

John Pound.

Undertaking Continued BY KYNAST BROS.,

We the undersigned desire to make known to the public, that we have recently purchased of Mrs. L. W. Lyon, the entire Undertaking Business including Store Fixtures, etc. Mrs. Lyon retires from business, Kynast Bros. succeed. Having now two well established Businesses in one, we anticipate a large trade. We have therefore reduced prices on all our goods, cheerfully giving our patrons the benefit of the union of these two businesses namely, Furniture & Undertaking, which really belong together, especially in a country town, as experience for running the two branches of business are but little more than they would be for one branch only. Our experience in the Undertaking profession has been of six years practice, and constant study to improve and perfect the business in all its branches, and making it successful in every respect. Many have been the improvements and some very practical inventions made by us, for which we have not space to explain, but we cordially invite all to call at our Undertaking Department on Main street, and we will show you through. We now furnish patent folding chairs at each funeral, free of charge for the convenience of mourners and friends. We also attend to the laying out of bodies and preserving them by the method taught by the Rochester school of N. Y., the best method in the world. Call early and we will go hence to give satisfaction in every instance. And now thanking you for the many kind favors of the past, we hope to merit a continuance of the same in the future. We shall do all we can to make our place of business pleasant and attractive for you to come. Honesty the best policy is our cardinal virtue, and let live our motto.
