

IT NEVER COMES AGAIN.

There are pills for all our ills... But when you get the cream of the crop...

A LOVE AFFAIR.

By MARY KYLIE DALLAS.

I was about to pop the question. I am Thomas Trip. I had been trying to make up my mind to do it for some time.

I had come to the Drake House to talk and see what result it would have been to enjoy my life in any way that offered.

My sister only vouchsafed these words: "I'll never speak to you again."

Fred gave me an account of a race and a binary match, and then added: "Don't make a fool of yourself, Tom."

I packed my letters together, tore them into little bits, and making my best bow, went out in search of my brother.

Bella was not in the house. In fact, she had a little headache and had gone out for a few days, and had seemed to me to get out of my way a good deal.

"What's Miss B. there?" I asked the manager, who was superintending the arrival of some bags of potatoes.

"Becken she's gone over to her grandma's," she said.

"What's Miss B. there?" I asked the manager, who was superintending the arrival of some bags of potatoes.

"Good by, sweetheart," were his last words to the beautiful girl who hung about his heels.

"Why?" I asked.

"Also are you cruel, I thought; but I don't blame them."

I hurried her away to a romantic spot and there, where it seemed unlikely that we should be interrupted.

"Oh, I still think more," said Bella.

"No, I don't say more," said I. "I will tell you, Bella. Will you be my wife?"

"My goodness!" said Bella, struggling to leave my arms.

"Don't be foolish, Mr. Trip," said Bella. "I will never be your wife."

"I dropped her hand."

"I just as well as it can be if you feel as she does."

"I drew myself up with dignity."

"I went to New York next day, and the family generally followed me."
