GRAND JUNCTION, COLO., Mar. 29, 1890.

ED. ORANGE JUDD FARMER:—In my previous letters I have written only of the fruit and vegetable resources of the Grand Valley. I wish now to call attention to some other resources of this favored locality. Immediately surrounding the valley are the famous Book Cliff Mountains, through these cliffs, for miles, large coal measures crop out at the surface. Its quality is varied in kind and quality, including large veins of a bituminous variety suitable for domestic and steam purposes, and also a fine quality of cooking coal, and in quantities that are practically inexhaustible. Back of the mountains containing coal, the precious mineral-bearing mountains begin, in which the famous mining districts of Leadville, Aspen, Ouray, and a dozen other mining camps are situated. A few years ago tributary to a minor gravitating power to the town of Grand Junction, which prior to completion of the Railroads now building make this one of the great smelting centers of the West.

New with regard to Railroad Facilities Grand Junction is, today, the terminus of the Denver and Rio Grande narrow gauge from Denver westward, and the terminus of the Rio Grande Western from Salt Lake City eastward, and also of the little Rio Cliff Railroad. The Denver & Rio Grande and Rio Grande Western are now building a broad gauge road down the valley of the Grand to meet at Grand Junction, which broad gauge is now being laid from Salt Lake eastward. All of these broad gauge roads are to be completed by next July, the grading being now practically completed and track laying commenced. Thus this gives an outlet in every direction for this season's crop, and in a short time several other roads, lines, will be built here, fully a dozen others having already made surveys or now making them with a view of either being built in this point or passing through. Representatives of two large Smelting Companies are here now, within the past few days, with a view of securing suitable sites for their respective works. More anon. W. W.

Rev. A. C. Crimer, Young Presbyterian minister, pastor of Mount Olive, has been suspended for marrying Miss Cora Goodwin. He made the ceremony private and the day for the wedding, when he was called west to preach. Young Crimer is a member of a family of prominence, without warning Miss Goodwin's father was so prostrated by grief that it is feared she will lose her season.

"Whenever I am depressed with that vexing pain, dyspepsia, I take Ayer's Pills. Their wonderful efficacy, relieving me of headache, weak or flatulent stomach and the many discomforts of the disease, are lasting. Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which is a positive cure for all pulmonary complaints, is also my family medicine, and I can confidently recommend it as a safe and reliable remedy."
