FOOLING THE CAMERA.

Skillfully Painted Faces May Deceive the Lenses of the Photographers.

Some of our girls are learning how to be photographed beautifully and tricksily. "Have you observed and wondered," said one of the most celebrated of the camera men, "how well the actresses manage to look when the eye of the camera is focused on them? Well, I can tell you how to do as well as they do. First, choose an artistic photographer. No, matter how much you know about what you want and what to wear, there are matters of view, and light and shade, for which you must depend absolutely upon him. But he will not be able to advise you how to make up your face and will probably object sweepingly to any such device. That is where he is mistaken. If he were wise he would know how to pose a girl, and then with a bit of white and a bit of black chalk make her lovely for that view. Several of the New York photographers do this now. The stock pose, into which photographers, on general principles, put victims over whom they don't intend to bother, is three-quarters, which is an abomination to most faces. There is small chance for expression; the eye gets no show at all, and the contour of the cheek, which is seldom beautiful, except in children, is betrayed. You will find they have a rooted objection to full-face positions. I have never been able to discover why. There is a tendency to raise one eyebrow higher than the other, or look cross-eyed, but it is his business to look out for that, and stop you if your features begin to wander around your face.

"Now, in painting a face for photography the eyes can safely be made up a great deal. Put black under the eye, only don't let it be just one heavy black line. Shadow it out softly. Blacken the lashes as much as they will stand, only don't let them be lumpy. Increase the apparent length and sweep of the upper lid, by which the size of the eye is judged, with a line continuing the line of the lashes, and a parallel one continuing the line of the crease that shows just above when the eye is open. Draw these only as long as can be done without their showing as lines. An actress obtained a clever picture, in which the effect of very long lashes is given by lines, presumably shadows thrown by said lashes, painted above the eye, just under the eyebrows. Use red very carefully. Your lips probably need painting into an improvement upon their own shape. Do it softly, and with very faint red. Red takes black. Look carefully and you will trace a hard line about the lips of many actresses' photographs. Sometimes you don't need to look carefully. If you want a dimple to show specially, you can heighten its light and shade a little; but unless your photographer poses you so that the dentee does not betray itself the effect will be a failure. Having thus accentuated your face, don't disturb its arrangement by a smile, or smirk, or any other grimace of expression when the lens is opened on you. Otherwise, art and nature will make a hopeless mess of your features. But if you have planned an expression in harmony with the make-up, save it till the last moment. The operator is bound to grip the back of your neck with his monster wrench, and if you hang on to your joyful smile all through that ordeal you will get something demoniac and wild to send to your friends."—*N. Electricity in Agriculture.

The application of electricity to agriculture has long been discussed. There have long stood in the way the uncertainty how to apply it and the difficulty of ascertaining what the exact effect of electricity on plants was. Many investigators have reported a greatly increased yield. Mr. N. Spencer, says the Illustrated American, described the latest experiments in practical electricity.

In one series he used seeds of haricot beans, sunflowers and winter spring rye. The seeds were soaked, electrified and immediately sown. The plants were more developed, their leaves were larger and their color brighter than those grown from non-electrified seed, but the yield was not affected.

In another series of experiments plates of copper and zinc about two feet by two feet and six inches were buried at the end of the plots, and connected by their upper faces, the effect being to establish a current through the earth. The result was manifested by a larger crop and by the growth of vegetables of enormous dimensions.

In a third series electrical collectors were mounted on insulated rods and connected by wires, the effect being to obtain a highly electrified atmosphere. Seeds of rye, corn, oats, barley, peas, clover, potatoes and flax were used. This form of electroculture increased the yield of seed an average of one half, and that of straw one-third, while the ripening was more rapid.

It was also found that potatoes grown by electroculture were rarely diseased, and as the beneficial effects of electricity on vines affected by phyloxe. a have already been observed it is possible that new means is at hand of combating the microscopic pests which attack vegetable growth.

Hunting the Gorilla.

"I continued my travels all alone from one tribe to another, with their languages, which carried me through a couple of tribes, when I would have to stop and learn another language. I finally got to the cannibal country, the land of the gorilla. I here heard some startling stories about this 'man-ape,' but I found out at first get any of the natives to go with me to hunt the gorilla. At last I gave three cannibals as many beads as they could carry to go with me. On the night before we started they danced around the idols and bled their hands in about twenty places and rubbed the blood over their hearts. They then scraped the bones of their ancestors and swallowed the scrapings, under the belief that it would get into their blood and make them brave. We then went into the forest. The silence was wonderful. Not a sound broke the stillness. We saw nothing for two days. On the third day I was about 100 yards ahead of the party when I heard the sound of a branch breaking. I gave the signal of danger. The others came to me and we heard the one noise again. The branches of the trees near us were loaded down with red berries. My heart was beating and I was forced to stand still to calm myself. I waited for a few minutes and there was no sound. Suddenly the noise was repeated and a huge monster stood before us. He had a black face, short legs and body covered with hair. His deep-sunken gray eyes looked at me, as he sat twelve feet away. With a howl he was getting ready to come for me when I shot him through the heart. (This was the first gorilla killed by a white man in 2,000 years.

"The beast measured 5 feet 11 inches and the spread of his arms was 9 feet 4 inches. The circumference of his chest was 7 feet. He seemed to be constructed of bones and muscles of wire."

ADDITIONAL HOME NOTES.

Now that Birmingham is just plunging headlong into the tiddledy-winks craze, the following description of the game by a Marquette devotee will be read by interest: Tiddledy-winks is played with tiddledies, a wink, a wink pot, and a dingus dufficities. Each player takes a dingus. The winks are divided equally, likewise the dufficities. Take a wink, put it on the dingus, then by passing a tiddledy on the wink make it jump into the wink pot—if you can. If you succeed you are entitled to a dufficity, and for every wink you jump into the wink pot from the dunk you count a fictiddledy, and continue so to operate the wink winkle upon the pollywog, untill the points so carried shall equal the sum total of the hogwhip multiplied by the puteinktum and added to the contents of the winkpot, when you may be said to have won the game.

Not only the literary world but the public in general, will await with much curiosity the promised publication of a new Quarterly magazine which threatens to record a new departure and purchance to mark an epoch in this department of literature. About the middle of February will be published in Detroit the first number of the "Quarterly Register of Current History," the scope of which will embrace the whole of the period of the year which is past. In future numbers the Quarterly Register will deal with the history of the wide world for the current quarter. If, as has been said the noblest study for mankind is man, then the new Quarterly deserves well of the American public, for its pages are devoted, in a style which is at once elegant and attractive, to the doings of men, socially, politically, and in science art and literature throughout the world; nor are the acts of God forgotten, for due notice is taken of all the catastrophes. The success of the first number is, we are told, already a well assured fact.

We think that a chair upholstered in plush and other kindred cloths at $80 is quite extravagant, but D. M. Johnston, our palmstaking dentist, has a chair for his office that cost just $80. We won't say that the pain of having teeth extracted or filled is any the less in the new chair than in the old one, but in this new patent the victim can be raised to the ceiling or lowered to the floor allowing the pain giving dentist every advantage for his work. New devices for head rest, shoulder support, back adjuster are all combined and each and every one adjustable to any sized person, with a foot rest capable of being lengthened, shortened, raised, depressed and set at any angle to please the most fastidious, arm rests on both sides can be lowered or raised as required, and then the pleasant, encouraging, soothing, satisfying, vocal sympathy of Dan as he lays hold of another grinder can not be equalled anywhere in the land. From a number self inserted on page 5 Detroit or Pontiac for their dental work, but we are shown by Mr. Johnston that he actually receives orders for plate work from those cities and other portions of the state that more than balances the loss. If in need of any dental work of any kind, why go from home to strangers who can not excel our Dan in any branch of the work.

The February Wide Awake opens with a ballad of Horsham. When Sir Edward Coke, ancestor of the present British Minister at Washington, Sir Julian Pauncefote, was captured by the Saracens, they demanded his wife's right hand in ransom, and the brave lady so saved her lord. Sir Julian Pauncefote supplied the editor, Mary Bradley, with authentic facts. Mr. E. H. Garrett's pictures for the ballad are finely dramatic. Other poems are by Elizabeth W. Bellamy and Mary E. Wilkins. The interesting illustrated articles of the number include about Premier's ancestry, account of "Life at Tuxedo Park," and a sort of military pendant a curious account of "A Fish Army." The short stories are unusually clever, from the ingenious plot of "Aunt Dolly's Two Robbers," to the laughter and tears of "A Hungry Boy." Mrs. Burton Harrison's story, "Diamonds and Toads," is concluded. Kirk Munroe's railroading serial develops a startling situation, and the doings of Margaret Sidney's "Peppers" are delightful as ever.

Detroit, Mich., Feb. 6, 1891.

Editors of the Courier:

It seems to me that the suggestions offered by Mr. Langley, in regard to village improvement, can not fail to meet the approval of all who care interested in the prosperity of our village.

Money invested in this way will certainly bring paying returns, not only to the enterprising property in the village, but to those owning farms near the town, and with their interest and help we certainly can succeed. I will gladly be one of the twenty or more to give five dollars, to be expended as the committee may suggest.

BIG BEAVER BLIZZARDS.

All quiet on the Potomat at present.

Miss Laura Axtell visited at Mr and Mrs. N. L. Robbins last week.

The revival meetings are still in progress and the end is not yet.

From present indications the Beaver will be well represented at the Lincoln Club banquet, the 12th, as some 16 of our fellow Republicans have secured tickets and are full fledged members.

The hop given by the B. B. D. C. last Friday evening was well attended. The hall was full and everyone reports a good night and a grand time.

The Beaver authority on poultry says that one of our prize Leghorns has the roup and prescribes carbolic acid. We notice that several of our townsmen are developing the same symptoms. New name, though.

If a man wants two or three thousand pickets now days, he just loads up a log or two, takes them to Fred Lamb's picket mill, waits at the office until the mail is changed, loads up his pickets and is home in time for dinner. Perhaps this isn't hustling. Well, rather.

It is certainly encouraging to see so many of our people, old and young, turn over a new leaf and resolve to live better lives in the future. We all admire nobility of purpose and should lend a helping hand instead of trying to discourage those who are sincere in their endeavor to do like that all can see the change for the better.

$3000 A YEAR! I undertake to lately teach any fairly intelligent person, of either sex, how easily and rapidly to earn the above salary, in their own localities, wherever they live. Any one can do the work and live at home. The business is so pleasant, easy, and honorable, that I will teach industriously, those who write me immediately, the secret, free. There is more money in labor, whatever they live. I will also furnish the necessary capital to those who will make a good use of it. Many have made over $3000 in a year. Women do as well as men. Some girls and young men are earning over $500 a year each. It is NEW and LIGHT. Address, if you desire, by return mail, E. C. ALLEN, Box 420, Augusta, Maine.
