THE FARM AND HOME.

BREEDERS WANTED TO STOP PAMPERING PIGS.

Serious Errors in Feeding—Ways Right and Wrong—Cheap Training of Tomatoes—Stock Notes and Farm Hints.

Suggestions on Feeding.

It has been said "That he who never did a foolish thing never did a wise one," and, as I have had a good deal of success with hogs, I have no hesitation in detailing some blunders I have made, in the hope that others may profit thereby, writes John Cownie in Coleman's Rural World.

A good many years ago one spring found me with twenty-five thoroughbred sows, all in pig to the best boar I could find. In due time 160 as choice pigs as anyone could wish were brought forth and doing well. Determined to outdo all previous efforts in the swine business, I procured a large quantity of corn meal, shorts, bran and oil meal, and started in to feed those sows. I succeeded well; they had good appetites and evidently enjoyed the ration I prepared, but it was just three weeks when the last pig expired. You say, almost suddhy, overfed the sows and killed them. Precisely. I know it now and am very careful about feeding sows while nursing their pigs. These sows were turned to pasture, fed some oil meal, grain, bred as soon as possible, and in the fall had again a fine lot of pigs, which averaged at selling 375 pounds each. Had the sows nursed their pigs, would scarcely have been possible and I refer to it as showing what can be done in an emergency, if only the conditions are favorable.

While fattening nearly 200 hogs one winter, during some very cold weather I had closed every opening in the hog house, in an endeavor to make the hogs as comfortable as possible. A sudden rise in the temperature one night made me somewhat uneasy on awakening in the morning, and the worst fears were realized on opening the door of the hog house, when I was met by an atmosphere so stifling as to prove to me that some great wrong had been done. Doors were immediately thrown open and every means taken to thoroughly ventilate the building, but I lost several of my finest hogs, and it was several weeks before the others fully recovered. Now I attach more importance than ever to thorough ventilation at all times. Pure air, clean, sweet food, pure water and a good dry bed, will amply repay for any time expended in securing them.

Several years ago meeting a neighbor probably in September, when now corn was just becoming profitable for feed, he casually remarked, "I have put up my hogs to fatten, and am going to crowd them right along as I believe the early markets will be the best."

I suggested that he must be careful not to overfeed, that new corn was easily digested and readily assimilated and might cause serious damage in his herd, but in a careless manner, saying that he would not think of feeding new corn to his horses, except in very limited quantities, but he concluded that hogs were different from horses, and went home as he said, to "shove it into them." Several weeks later we met again. "My hogs have the chicken cholera, eight or ten a day," were his first words.

I could name many other instances of hogs dying in large numbers shortly after the advent of new corn, but it is needless, every observing person knows that this is a critical time in the hog's existence. Do not understand me as saying that this is the cause of all disease in hogs. Nothing of the kind, but allow me to urge upon every one interested in swine to be careful in regard to sudden changes in diet, and rather err by under than over feeding.

Gentlemen of the Swine Breeders' association, I have now told you some of the faults of the average farmer of the state. I have told you of blunders made by myself. I have told you of mistakes made by my neighbors. Now let me tell you of a serious wrong some of you are perpetrating upon the farmers of Iowa. I refer to the pernicious practice of over-feeding animals intended to be sold for breeding purposes. I am aware that flesh will tend to maturity, a trait of value in any animal, but I am also sure that hog breeding in Iowa has now reached such perfection in your hands that this kind of feeding is recalled for, as it is injurious.

In the community in which I live every farmer, worthy of the name, purchases each fall at least one male pig from some breeder making a specialty of the business, and I know that I am within bounds when I state that three-fourths of all those thus purchased last year were absolutely worthless for breeding purposes. It needs no argument to prove that this resulted from the too common habit of pampering and feeding those young animals to make them appear well.

You breeders no doubt take a particular pride when you ship a pig in having him look his best, but it is done at a fearful cost to the purchaser. Let me give you one instance that occurred last year. A neighbor, one of the most successful feeders in the state, had purchased a boar, the best he could find, and he was as near perfection as such an animal can be brought, but he proved utterly worthless for the purpose for which he was purchased. Writing to another prominent member of this association, the reply came, "all choice pigs sold," but he added, "I have one who escaped the knife and is running out, the breeding is good, but I don't look very well having received no cash, you can have him for $10."

The pig was purchased, and truly he did look very well, but at nine-teen weeks from his arrival raw nearly 150 choice, healthy pigs of his get, proving that he had one essential qualification.

Need I say more? Take this lesson to heart, stop pampering your pigs, and the farmers of Iowa instead of continuing the narrow-minded policy of swapping pigs with their neighbors will patronize more liberally than over the men who have made it a life work to improve this useful animal. Nothing is more fully demonstrated than the fact that to secure success with swine it is indispensable to purchase breeding animals from those making a specialty of the business.

Ways Right and Wrong.

"Greenhorn" drives a nail so it splits the lumber almost invariably; a mechanic puts it in place so it hardly shows, or even becomes an ornament. The educated man of the plains knows how to throw the lasso, one jerk of his strong arm, while riding full tilt, will send it singing to fall just over the horns of the desired steer. A thoughtless man will throw a blanket on his horse in the stable, again around the animal several times to pull it in place. We peel a tree correctly by first removing a few feet length of bark around the trunk next to the ground before felling it, and taking off all the bark, thus none is wasted on chips and stump. The ax is hung aright when the helve is first dried and seasoned thoroughly before sharpening to fit the head, and the head cleansed where the helve is to go in, by washing, wiping and drying. The head is he fastened tightly to stay, while the helve is being wedged, it then shrinks onto the handle and never loosens. Half the labor of crop cultivation is saved by proper preparation and planting. We plough, wait long enough for surface seeds to germinate, harrow, wait again and harrow, planting directly. Before the crops large enough to be injured by the team a good cross-harrowing kills millions of weeds and rarely disturbs a plant. The old way ploughed and plant at any time, and then "plough out" and hoe laboriously, has driven many a boy off the farm.—N. Y. Times.

The Nervous Cow.

The cow is a very nervous creature if she is worth anything. When you find a cow that is undisturbed by anything that may happen outside of the ordinary, you have found a cow that had better go to the shambles as soon as possible. But an exceedingly irritable animal will be found to be a good cow. But she must be used with great gentleness. I have two cows that I always milk myself. While I insure upon gentleness upon the part of help, and secure it, too, to a degree, no man will be quite as gentle with your cows as you will be yourself, supposing that you are a kind man. The slightest noise while milking will disturb them, unless they are accustomed to it, and affect them myself and they respond grandly. The lesson I would draw from the nervousness of those cows is that every animal in the herd should be studied by the dairyman, and the treatment given each should conform to the necessities of the case. Making the one thing out of which that the farmer should personally oversee. Men may be trusted anywhere else better than they can be trusted with the cows. Five out of every ten milked and every blow at such times takes money out of the owner's pocket.—Farmer's Voice.

Putting Down Oil Cloth.

In putting down oil cloth you do not tack as you do with carpets—plan out the whole room, first putting in a tack here and there to hold it at its position until ready for the final tacking. It is disagreeable work to fit oil cloth, and you will need a very sharp knife to cut it in shape. A good way of keeping a loose edge is to have a piece of fine emery paper, and every once in a while rub the blade of the knife flat on it, drawing it along as if it were an oilstone. After the oil cloth is fitted put in as few tacks as possible. Matting is laid in the same way, and here again staples will be found better than tacks to use at the joinings to prevent fraying.

Cheap Training of Tomatoes.

Wire is now sold so cheaply that it makes the most economical as well as the best support for tomato vines. Set two rows of stakes on each side of the hills after once cultivating through them both ways. On these stakes grain the vines winding the wire around each stake to hold it in place. Once in a while the wires should cross to help keep the stakes in position. The fruit will be kept from the ground and will not rot its early specimens so badly as where the vines lie sprawling on the ground.—American Cultivator.

Stock Notes.

Fat cattle can be grown cheaper on good pastures than any other way.

Whenever a calf is taken away to wean it should be kept out of sight and hearing of its mother.

A good big sheep or steer will nearly always pay handsomely, but it many cases a poor one will not.

Pure bred stock costs a little more at the start, but they amply repay by the superiority of their offspring.

When cattle are high a richer ration often feed a scrub steer without a positive loss, but rarely so with low prices.

The improved animal has a strong, thrifty habit, and it is its nature to make a vigorous growth from the start.

It does not pay to feed to maturity a steer that is not well shaped growthy and that does not lay on flesh rapidly.

Cutting out the outside horn from a calf's head is not a painful operation, not as much so as docking a lamb's tail.

The farmer that is feeding cattle for profit can always afford to pay more for well-bred square-built compact animals to feed, than for lank, lean scrubs.

With cattle and sheep rule it is easier to overstock than it is to always reduce the number that the farm can carry to the best advantage, and especially so when feed is short.

There is always more or less risk in feeding cattle as without good management a large amount of food can often be used without securing any decided improvement.

Home Hints.

Life is too short to scrub one's kitchen floor every day. There is so much that is more vital.

Remember that it is always better for the family to wait for the omelet than for the omelet to wait for the family.

If feather pillows have an unpleasant smell place them before a good fire and let them have a good, thorough drying.

Slate floors should be polished, rubbing first with a smooth, flat piece of pumice stone and finally polish with rotten stone.

Book kept in ordinary bookshelves and thus exposed to the air, will keep much better than those in bookcases with closed doors.

Tea leaves are good to sprinkle on all but very delicate carpets before sweeping, as it prevents dust from rising, and also brightens the colors.

According to the Medical Record castor oil has not failed in any case to remove warts to which it was applied once a day for two to six weeks.

Of cooked fruits baked or roasted are first on the list, then stewed, then boiled. All fruits are better for having the skins taken off previous to eating.

To wash calico without fading put three gills of salt in four quarts of water, put the calico in this while the solution is hot and leave it in it till it becomes cold, then wash and rinse.

Dr. Hutchinson recommends for the treatment of bleeding at the nose the plunging of the feet and hands of the patient in water as hot as can be borne. He says that the most rebellious cases have never resisted this method of treatment.

TRAINING PIGS TO RACE.

A New Pastime on the Race-Track in California.

Ever since Healy's pig Casey covered himself with glory and money by fighting the rattlesnake Mara, Michenfelder has been thinking of raising a breed of athletic porkers whose feats of agility and skill would sell and retail from the rising to the setting of the sun.

With this object in view, says the San Francisco News-Letter, he has been scouring the country far and wide and advertising in a most extensive manner for hard bacon, anatomy should contain a high percentage of muscle and sinew and be practically devoid of fat.

He has now secured a choice litter, which promises well to come up to the required standard, and every morning with the regularity of a good race-horse breeder, he takes the little chaps out to train.

He begins in the early dawn by giving them a stiff walk up to the reservoir and back, and whenever one of the youngsters gets too fresh he sulks on the way he puts his little curly tail in clothespins, and if there is any punishment that is more totally degrading and hurtful to the amour propre of a small pig than another it is having the spring taken out of his curly tail by having said tail weighted down by clothespins.

After this walk he goes back to their yard and gives them a cold shower bath with a garden hose. Then they get a light breakfast of barley, and then they have a rest, for an half hour's rest for the purpose of facilitating digestion.

At 1:00 the speed trials begin and Michenfelder has found it too much business to attend to to personally superintend the matter, he has hit upon an ingenious labor-saving device whereby he can make those pigs run like wildfire without exerting himself at all.

He just strolls down town with a piece of lean meat and a switch, and up Healy's dog Jack and Black Pedro from the Pioneer, as well as Neff's Cy and Pearce's three dogs and half a dozen other sporting dogs, and by hitching in particular to occupy their attention. These he "sicks" on to the porkers and when the dogs are "sicked" it is a comfort to watch the pigs run.

The "sicking" process lasts from twenty to thirty-five minutes, by which time the athletes are winning in their race, and the dogs are beginning to be fagged out. They are permitted to rest until noon, at which time Michenfelder rounds up a few more dogs and gives his pots more exercise.

By this process he has reduced his herd to the narrow dimensions of twenty-five, who have grown down with a speed heretofore unknown among porkers.

Healy has another string out of the old Casey stock training in Oakland, and Kelood and Hanson are also starting speeding types.

There will be at least four good types of racing pigs owned in this city before long, when it is proposed that a pig race track be opened here and purses put up by an association for the encouragement of the sport.

It is more than likely that sports in Colma, Redwood, San Mateo and all joining districts will follow Michenfelder's example and raise several other strings of racers.

If so, the meeting of the Pig Racing association will assuredly be a big success, and the attendance at the sport will soon become widespread.

(One thing in favor of the new pastime is its moderate expense when compared with horse racing or coursing with greyhounds.

Pigs are cheap and easily handled, and it costs less per annum to maintain a first-class sty of racing pigs than it does to feed and stable a string of third-rate plugs that ever appeared at a country fair horse race.

PHARAOH WITH A PISTOL.

Remarkable Anachronisms of the Artists of Abyssinia.

We found the walls of the churches in Abyssinia covered with pictures of scriptural historical subjects, and the cathedral with the exploits of Johannes, says a writer in the Century. His victories over the Egyptians at Gundat and in the valley of the tumbo are fully represented in tones as bold as those of advertising posters at home. The native artist has not learned up for perspective or color by the accuracy of his drawing, and if these pictures have any merit it lay in their originality of treatment. The instructional cathedral of Gundat, in its picture representing the miraculous crossing the Red sea, Pharaoh carries in his right hand the latest pattern of a blunderbuss, and in his left hand he holds a pair of opera glasses, while the Egyptian foot sport Hessian boots. All the movement of figures is from right to left, and in all pictures heads are full faced, with the exception of Satan and the hated Egyptians, who are painted in acute profile to show their lack of honesty and to lessen their inability to look you square in the face. It is a deplorable fact, and one which ladies will say at once, only proves the depravity of the barity of the Ethiopians, that the evil spirits in these compositions are always represented by the softer sex, generally showing their misgivings by exhibiting their tongues. The church painter goes so far as to question the gallantry of St. George, the Abyssinian patron saint, by making that warrior, instead of doing battle with the dragon, as spearing the graceful, undulating form of a long-tongued woman.

The Alumni.

Among the spectators at Yale's commencement was a New Haven woman who reported to the Palladium a conversation she overheard. Two well dressed ladies were watching the procession, and when the gray hairs of venerable graduates became conspicuous one said to the other: "Who are they? Oh, those are the alumni, I suppose, dear?" "Yes?" Well, who are the alumni?" "Why, how funny you don't know! The alumni! Why, they are the old men like Depew and all that sort of people."

THE TITAN OF CHASMS.

A Mile Deep, 13 Miles Wide, 217 Miles Long, and Painted Like a Flower.

The Grand Canon of the Colorado river in Arizona, is now for the first time easily accessible to the tourist. A railway has been established from Flagstaff, Ariz., to the rim of the canon, and the time of the trip from Flagstaff to the canon, including part of the canon, is less than twelve hours. A mile deep, thirteen miles wide, is only 225, and novels and comfortable coaches are used throughout the trip at a reasonable price. The view of the Grand canon afforded at the terminus of the road is one of the most grand panorama known in nature. There is absolutely no foothold from the rim to the river wall, more than 6,000 feet vertical, and the river below. The descent of the trail is a matter of two days' hard work, and only for in the bottom of this terrible and sublime chasm, the boundless fountain greater than any of the Alpine range.

A book describing the trip to the Grand Canon, with illustrations, maps and engravings from special photographs, and containing full information, may be obtained free upon application to John Byrne, Gen. Manager, Chicago, Ill.

Low Rate Harvest Excursions.

The announcement that the North Western Line, comprising over 8,000 miles of well equipped railway, has arranged to run low rate harvest excursions during the months of August and September, will be gladly received by those who are interested in the development of the great West and North-west, as well as by those who seek to take advantage of the productive region at a season of the year when exact demonstration can be made of the merits and advantages it offers to homeseekers and those in search of safe and profitable investments.

These excursions will leave Chicago on August 30th and Sept. 27th, and tickets will be issued at the reduced low rate of one fare for the round trip to points in Iowa, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, Idaho and Montana. They will be strictly first-class in every particular and will be good for return passage at any time within twenty days from date of purchase.
