Going to Buy Furniture?

If so, you are interested in knowing where you can do the best. Just now the papers are full of "ads" of "special sales." Some may be genuine reductions, but many of them are fakes, as you can prove by comparing their "sale" prices with prices advertised say a month ago. Hunt up an old paper and see.

But no matter whether the prices are reduced or not, the dealer who can and will sell the lowest at any time is the one with the lowest selling expense-percentage, and that dealer is myself, as I can prove to anyone.

Because a dealer gives 20 per cent off on a $10 article, making it $8, does not make it lower than my price of $7 on the same article; does it? Dealers make their own prices on most Furniture, and those prices are governed by their selling expenses. There is no getting away from this fact, as they have to make money at their special sales as well as at any other time; so no matter what reason may be given for a "sale" by any other dealer, come here and see for yourself that our prices are lower.

A $50,000 stock to select from. For the first time I now have an expert Furniture man as manager of my store, so we will give better service than we have been able to heretofore.

The Making of a Man

By HENRY FOSTER

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

Steve and his wife had talked it over for a long time before the legacy arrived so unexpectedly from his uncle Harry. It was only for $500, but it clinched Steve's resolution.

An uneducated man, leaving the primary school at twelve to work for his mother's support, Steve was at heart a gentleman. But a man's heart counts for very little against a man's manners. And Steve was—not rough, for he was altogether fineness itself—but ill-bred. He would not pass muster except among the laboring class.

Netta was something higher. She had worked in a department store, where Steve was one of the packers. He had come to know her by knocking down a masher who was pestering the girl with his attentions. And Netta, struck by the kindness of the man, gradually came to care for him. And they had been married three years. There were two babies, a girl and a boy. And Steve was still packing case, at $15a week.

They had talked over their own and their children's future so many times. And the same blank wall stretched before them. There was no future. Already every penny of their little earnings went week by week. Then came the legacy.

"There's no chance for an uneducated man like me," Steve said. "The only way for me to make money is to find it."

"To find it, dear?" asked Netta.

"In the ground," said Steve. "I'm going to Alaska. And, Netta, dearest—"

"Oh, Steve, I can't have you go," she sobbed.

"It's for little Ellen and Tom," he answered. "We've got to make the sacrifice, Netta."

She brought herself to his viewpoint. For the sake of the babies, to give them the advantages which their father had never had, Steve must go.

At Last He Settled Down Grimly to Making His Pile.

He set two years as the limit of his absence. He took a hundred dollars and left Netta with four hundred. That would last her forty weeks, with great economy. And long before that period had elapsed Steve would send her some more.

So he promised, and so he performed. At the end of six months Steve was making his fifty weekly in Alaska. He was working in a store, but he wrote that he was keeping his eyes open for opportunities, and at the end of the year he meant to go out prospecting. He inclosed for Netta two hundred dollars.

Thereafter she got twenty-five weekly. She little guessed the cheapness of money in Alaska, or what Steve was denying himself. And gradually she settled down to recursion herself to his absence. Steve wrote that he was going into the interior, and she might not hear from him for a while, but he was not going into any danger, and she was not to worry.

A letter came two months later, inclosing five hundred, and announcing that Steve had struck a rich claim. Netta wrote out of the joy of her heart, and he answered much later. That was the last letter Steve received from Netta.

As the months slipped by and none of Steve's letters were answered he became desperate. At last he settled down grimly to making his pile. He trusted Netta, and he believed that, if she were dead, somebody would have written. He did make inquiries about her, but people do not trouble to interest themselves on behalf of those who are distant, and nobody answered him.

When the two years were ended Steve saw a fortune within his grasp if he remained a third year. He remained a third, and at the end of that time it was a case of a cool million if he remained a fourth. So he stayed a fourth, and then business went to the dogs, and it meant a fifth year.

At the end of the fifth Steve sold out for three millions and a half and went home.

He had had little hopes of finding Netta in the flat they had occupied, and so he was spared that disappointment. But the old lady who came to the door ran after Steve as he turned away.

"Your son, Mr. Stephen Jackson?" she asked.

"Steve Jackson—yes' ma'am," said Steve.

"I can tell you where your wife is," she said. "She comes here every three months to tell me that if you ever come back here she has the house at 124 Chestnut street."

Steve almost whooped with gladness, but he only thanked her and hurried away. And in an hour's time he was in the suburban district, and had found 124.

It was a trim little cottage, covered with a flowering vine, and Steve suddenly found himself too shy to enter. And as he hung outside the door, in an agony of apprehension and joy, two children entered the gate of the little garden.

They were Ellen and Tom. Steve knew his own anywhere. And they were dressed as he had never hoped to dress his children.

"Where are you going?" asked the man at the gate.

"We're coming from school," answered the little boy.

"You are Tom Jackson, aren't you?"

"Yes. This is Ellen."

"And does your mother live here?"

"Yes, sir."

"And your father?"

"Father's away, but he's coming home soon," said the little girl. "Mummy prays for him to come every night. And we pray, too."

Steve looked at the house and at the children. These were his—everything was as he had dared to dream that it would be; and yet now he was afraid. He was afraid that he, a common man, would bring his commonness into their lives. He had been away so long—why should he ever return?

In that moment, for the first time, in spite of what his child had said, he had a doubt of Netta. He wondered whether she had stopped writing to him because of this, because he would drag her and her children down.

And he turned miserably away. He would go somewhere to think it all over.

He went down the sunny street, slinking like a whipped dog. Why had he not spent those five years in educating himself, to make himself worthy of his wife and children?

"Steve!"

It was Netta. She was standing before him, and she threw herself into his arms. "Steve! It is you, dearest!"

"Netta!" The man's doubts dissolved at the sight of her radiant face.

"Steve, my dear, how I have longed for you! I have been working as a stenographer, and the babies—you must see our babies—why didn't you write, Steve?"

When she grew more coherent explanations followed: Steve's letters had not been received—perhaps the mail was lost. Netta had not known where to write him; all trace of him had been lost when he went into the interior. And the letters he had sent to her address had not been forwarded. Many tenants had come and gone before the old lady whom Steve had seen, and the post office does not always remember.

"Why were you going away from the house, Steve?" asked Netta.

"I was ashamed," he burst out. "I saw our babies, Netta, and I thought—God forgive me—an uneducated man like me would drag them down—"

"Jim, dear," said Netta, "it is better to be a good man than a learned one. But please God you're going to be both, Jim, because I am making good money, and you and I can live as we want to live, and study together—"

Then he told her about the fortune.

Unnecessary.

I often wish I had the nerve of my friend Jimson.

The other night at a Christmas party he deliberately walked up to the prettiest girl in the room and kissed her.

"How dare you?" she cried, blushing furiously. "I am not under the mistletoe."

"That's all right," responded Jimson. "A girl with a face like yours doesn't need any mistletoe."

And then he kissed her again.

High Cost of Courting.

Rev. Dr. W. Wofford T. Duncan says the high cost of courting must be curbed or there will be a decrease in marriages. In the good old days, the doctor says, when a man courted a girl, he occasionally brought her flowers or a box of candy and she was satisfied. But the modern girl, he says, collects gifts from her male admirers as if these gifts were the premiums of an advertising concern. "There is a decided mercenary streak in many a girl of today," declares Doctor Duncan. "She not only allows, but expects, the young man of the period to spend on her and for her much more than he can afford. Even the mercenary spirit is cropping up in small children," says the good doctor. "Only recently he heard some schoolchildren humming: 'I should worry, I should care, I should marry a millionaire; if he should die, I should cry—I should marry another guy.'"—New York Times.

Zebra's Stripes.

The zebra's stripes and similar markings on other animals are called "protective colorings." In the theory of natural selection it is assumed that those animals survived who were best fitted to escape from enemies, and animals which were so colored and striped as to afford detection in the jungle passed on their characteristics to their descendants. Those which were easily detected did not survive to have progeny.

Genius of Giving.

Not long ago a woman promised me some wearing apparel for a certain poor family. When the box arrived, I found every article pressed, cleaned, and mended. I remarked upon this, and she replied, "I always send the things in first-class condition; otherwise it's only a relief to get old clothes out of the way, but if one mends, cleans and presses them, then I consider them a real gift."—Los Angeles Times.

THOS. E. HARRIS, Clerk.
PHILIP SCHLAACK, President.

Adjourned regular meeting of the council of the village of Birmingham, Oakland county, Michigan, Jan. 15, 1917, at 8 o'clock p. m.

Meeting called to order by President Schlaack.

Present: Trustees Trumbull, Brown, Jones, Harris.

Absent: Trustees Parks, Daines.

The following preamble and resolution were offered by Trustee Brown and supported by Trustee Trumbull:

Whereas, the village of Birmingham, Oakland county, Michigan, did, under date of March 9, 1915, enter into a certain contract with the Andrews Asphalt Paving Company, of Hamilton, Ohio, for the paving of a portion of Maple avenue, in said village, as is more fully set forth in said above contract;

Whereas, the village of Birmingham, Oakland county, Michigan, did, under date of March 9, 1915, enter into a certain contract with the Andrews Asphalt Paving Company, of Hamilton, Ohio, for the paving of a portion of Woodward avenue, in said village, as is more fully set forth in said above contract;

Whereas, said Andrews Asphalt Paving Company did perform in full the said above contracts;

Whereas, this council, by proper resolution, accepted the paving of said Maple avenue, as performed by said Andrews Asphalt Paving Company, under its said above contract, as of Jan. 1, 1916;

Whereas, this council, by proper resolution, accepted the paving of said Woodward avenue, as performed by said Andrews Asphalt Paving Company, under its said above contract as of July 1, 1916;

Whereas, this village has not paid said Andrews Asphalt Paving Company for the paving of said Maple and Woodward avenues, in the manner called for by said above contracts;

Whereas, there is now due and owing by the village of Birmingham to said Andrews Asphalt Paving Co. on said contract for paving Maple avenue, in said village, the sum of two thousand four hundred ($2,400.00), with interest thereon at the rate of five per cent. per annum from January 12, 1917;

Whereas, there is now due and owing by the village of Birmingham to said Andrews Asphalt Paving Company on said contract for the paving of Woodward avenue, in said village, the sum of thirteen thousand six hundred seventy-two dollars and twenty-three cents, with interest thereon at the rate of five per cent. per annum from January 12, 1917; Now therefore be it

Resolved, that this council do and it hereby does determine its indebtedness to the Andrews Asphalt Paving Company, to be the total sum of sixteen thousand seventy-two dollars and twenty-three cents ($16,072.23) with interest thereon at the rate of five per cent. per annum from January 12, 1917.

Ayes: Trustees Trumble, Brown, Jones, Harris. Nays, none.

The following preamble and resolution was offered by Trustee Brown and supported by Trustee Trumbull:

Whereas, the village of Birmingham, Oakland county, Michigan, is indebted to the Andrews Asphalt Paving Company, Hamilton, Ohio, in the total sum of sixteen thousand seventy-two dollars and twenty-three cents ($16,072.23) with interest thereon at the rate of five per cent. per annum from January 12, 1917, for the paving of Maple and Woodward avenues, in said village;

Whereas, the village of Birmingham, is unable to pay its above indebtedness, except in the manner hereinafter set forth;

Whereas, it is to the advantage of said village to submit to a judgment to be taken against it by the said Andrews Asphalt Paving Co. in the amount of its above indebtedness and then issue the judgment bonds of said village therefore.

Now, therefore, be it resolved that Thos. E. Harris, the village clerk, be and he hereby is authorized and directed to appear before the circuit court of Oakland county, Michigan, at a time to be indicated to him by Harry Allen, the village attorney, and then and there, in a suit heretofore begun or to be begun by the said Andrews Asphalt Paving Co. against the said village of Birmingham, admit, on behalf of said village, the indebtedness of said village to said Andrews Asphalt Paving Co. in the said above sum of $16,072.23, with interest thereon at the rate of five per cent. per annum, from January 12, 1917.

Ayes: Trustees Trumbull, Brown, Jones, Harris. Nays: none. Motion carried.

Moved by Jones, seconded by Harris, that bids for the purchase of the Andrews Asphalt Paving Judgment bonds be received and opened at the regular meeting, Jan. 22, 1917. Yeas, 4; nays, 0. Motion carried.

Moved by Jones, seconded by Trumbull, that, inasmuch as the special assessors and council, sitting jointly, having adjourned from January 8 to tonight, to hear objections to the assessment roll against property adjoining the main sanitary sewer, and there being no objections made to the roll as prepared and submitted by the special assessors, that the same be hereby duly confirmed. Yeas, 4; nays, 0. Motion carried.

Jones moved, Brown seconded, that we adjourn."

Songs Inspire Shower of Crockery.

Street singing is an especially Neapolitan institution, and when for the first time one hears Neapolitans shouting down the more often than not offkey versions of the snappy, lilting, inexpressibly infectious Neapolitan songs he is enchanted and throws pennies freely. After a week or so of it as a steady diet, day and night, he inclines much more to heavy crockery.—National Geographic Magazine.

The Penalty for a Good Reputation

When an article has been on the market for years and has given complete satisfaction when used in thousands of homes it creates for itself a valuable reputation, yet at the same time this good reputation has its penalty.

Foley's Honey and Tar Compound enjoys a splendid reputation, for it has been used for three generations. Its fair name and high repute have created a demand for it, and to supply this demand at a greater profit imitations and substitutes are offered.

Purchasers who know the original cannot be fooled by any "just as good" offering and it is worth the effort of any one who wants a reliable cough syrup to insist upon the original and genuine Foley's Honey and Tar Compound, which has proven so valuable for the relief of coughs, colds, croup and whooping cough.
