The late Dr. Creighton, Bishop of London, once made a visit to Father Stanton's church in High Holborn, a most ultra-ritualistic organization. The service was not quite to his liking, but Father Stanton felt sure that he did not have a chance to say anything until he got into his carriage to go away. Then he remarked: "I like your service, Stanton, but I don't like your incense." "Very sorry, my lord, very sorry," replied Father Stanton, submissively, "but it is the very best I can get for three shillings and sixpence a pound."

Representative John M. Allen of Mississippi once heard a pithy funeral sermon delivered by a negro preacher over a defunct darkey. The dead man had been fond of attending gay parties, where he whistled and danced, and these practices the preacher did not approve, so he said: "My brethren and sisters, we are here to pay our last sad respects to our departed brother. Some says he was a good man, and some says he was a bad man. Where he has gone to we ain't tell, but in our grief we have one consolation, and that is that he is dead!"

WITH THE SAGES.

Publicity is a force which, beyond all others, keeps the atmosphere of a country sweet and pure.—W. E. Gladstone.

Any man may do a casual act of good nature, but a continuation of them shows it is a part of their temperament.—Sterne.

All manifestations of true religion are parts of one silver thread running through the coarse fabric of the ages.—Hibberd Lecture.

All pleasure must be bought at the price of pain. For the true, the price paid before you enjoy it; for the false after you enjoy it.—John Foster.

Let us remember not what we have already done, but what we have not yet done for each other, and how we may do it.—Stopford Wentworth Brooke.
