NEW AND TRUE STORIES OF WELL-KNOWN PEOPLE

WATTERSON NOT A BETTOR.

One by one the idols of Kentucky are slowly falling. First, the great battleship named after the state, and christened by one of Kentucky's fairest daughters was baptized with plain cold water instead of with the red and fiery liquor for which the commonwealth of Kentucky is so celebrated. In song and story.

Henry Watterson.

This baptizing of the battleship Kentucky with water instead of whisky and which is generally referred to in Kentucky as the "crime of the ninetenth century" was the first great prop of tradition knocked from under Henry Watterson. But now comes another, and if anything a harder blow. Colonel Henry Watterson, the guardian angel of the only original straight bottle of rye and the man who made the Democratic party, thinking it was dead, in a moment of generosity, declared in an interview in Cincinnati that he had been wrong all the time and that La Follette was the man for President.

Colonel Henry Watterson is a man of the world and has been in every state in the union and has met every man of any importance in every state in the union. He has been in every city in the union and has met every man of any importance in every city in the union. He has been in every place in the union and has met every man of any importance in every place in the union. He has been in every place in the union and has met every man of any importance in every place in the union.
