

LIKE A HOUSE.
Men are like houses. They are built on a foundation of love. If the foundation is weak, the house will fall. If the foundation is strong, the house will stand. Men are like houses. They are built on a foundation of love. If the foundation is weak, the house will fall. If the foundation is strong, the house will stand.

A Story of Two Summers

By HOLLIS FREEMAN
CHAPTER IV
A week has gone by, and it is Saturday evening at the Herioton. The day has been hot and clear, and when evening comes, the cool breeze that comes from the lake blows out of the hotel and lodgings onto the parade, like a hand on a woman's face. The parade is thronged from one end to another, and the people are standing round in one great crowd, looking to the music.

Miss Somerville is sitting down by the band, and, as usual, it is her hand that is being kissed. She is looking at the man who is kissing her, but she does not look at him with gliding eyes and smiling lips, and does not look at him with gliding eyes and smiling lips. She is looking at the man who is kissing her, but she does not look at him with gliding eyes and smiling lips, and does not look at him with gliding eyes and smiling lips.

Married People.
The man who is kissing her is looking at her with gliding eyes and smiling lips, and does not look at her with gliding eyes and smiling lips. The man who is kissing her is looking at her with gliding eyes and smiling lips, and does not look at her with gliding eyes and smiling lips.
