Poor old Uncle Zach, he was bald and he was black, and there was but little wool upon his head; but he scrubbed up all the floors and he did a million chores and he really kept the bank boiler warm and clean. He was old and he was gray and he worked hard every day; but King Booze was bound to get him soon or late. They found him lone dark night in a really dreadful plight, so they gave him all the trimmings, up-to-date. Now he languishes in jail, for they wouldn't give him bail; and were careful not to make his sentence small. But with all this cost of livin', and the price for coal we're givin', don't you think old Zach was lucky after all?

The Western Liberal, supplement to The Lordsburg Progress, of Lordsburg, New Mexico, published by Mrs. W. H. Stevens, who used to be little Mary Kneeland, in Birmingham, long years ago, is a whale of a number. We have it on our desk, with a beautiful illuminated cover, eight full pages of interesting reading, with a magazine accompaniment. It's a beauty and reflects much credit upon its progressive editress.

If there is one thing more than another that Mrs. Fannie J. Shain does, it is remembering her old Birmingham home and her many friends therein. The last remembered is "ye editor" of the Eccentric, who received from these generous hands, a copy of the Los Angeles Times, a mammoth volume in seven parts, and 172 pages. It sure is a marvelous number, and chock full of California's great profits, its lures, and its climate. We wish all our readers had a copy. It would be reading matter for nearly all of 1917.
