When our friends, Messrs Eugene Brooks and Saml. Ford, arrived in their western town recently, our reporter heard that a diary of their accidents and incidents by flood and field had been kept by Mr. Brooks, and by dint of the pressure of power, with which we are known to be gifted, the coveted journal was soon in our possession, and we here-with give you readers the benefit of our extracts as all good journalists are bound to do.

On Tuesday, August 4, myself, Frank Ford and Frank Hagaman left Detroit at 9 p. m. bound for Chicago, and thanks to the modern conveniences of travel we had an excellent night's rest, arriving at Chicago at 7:30 Wednesday. The train on Oct. 13, at 11:30 a. m. and left for the week, we walked over a pleasant morning looking over the various points of interest in the Queen City of the west; also visiting some of the mammoth stores of State and Indiana. After breakfast and regretted that time would not allow us to call at the celebrated Central stock yards, but promising ourselves that pleasure upon our return, if kind Providence so ordered, a western jaunt would permit.

Leaving Chicago on our return, we arrived at Omaha, Neb., on Thursday morning at 10:30 a. m. and took the 12:00 P. M. train for the city of Chicago, and crossed the Mississippi river at Clinton, Iowa, and after a journey which was pleasantly moved with the incident, we were again in Chicago, and which were to white away an otherwise tedious journey, we eventually arrived at Omaha, Neb., on Thursday morning at 10:30 a. m. and took the 12:00 P.
