WILLEULAD OF MILLOUELL S.
ELIJAH.	A Translation.
First Kings, 19th Chapter, 4th Ferre.	My lamp hath burned out, drop by dre
Written by the Fev. G. W. Lowe and Spoken of the Evening of Children's Day by Miss Etc. Scott.	My fire's last ember falls with dying sound
Alone and in sadness he sank down to rest in that land of sweet sacred story. The son was sinking far down in the west, The hilliops were tinged with its glery.	Behind me-if I would but turn my head, Sure I should see B-stands a phantom here Dread guest who dame when my Bfc's fee was spread - Spectre arraye in ranks of vanished cheer
As the cool of the n'ght was fast coming on. And the desert whole saily monains. His thoughts dwelt only on hope which had flown. The future seemed darkness before him.	My dream lies dend; how tring it back truth? For Time escapes use, and the impostor Pri Conducts to nothingness my days of youth Even as a flock whereof he was the guide.
Then the prophet and man alike gave way. And the sad heart braves a deep bigh. For this to him was life's darkest day. And be requests there also so to div.	Like to the flood of some unfrainful deep, Over my corpe assumber in the tomb I feel een now the world's oblivion creep, Which, yet alive, both lapped me half gloom.
Yet, of all the great provides to Israel given. Ellish, the Tishbite, should stand at the head. He seemed like a messenger sent from heaven, Or anddenly called from the realm of the dead.	Othe cold night! Othe night dolorous! My hand upon my fireast attembbe bounds; Who knocks inside my hollow boson thus? What are those ominous beats, those muffle sounds? Who art thou -art thou? Speak, thou tamcie.
But there's many a day in the battle of life. When we think we are left quite alone. Then often the bravest sink down in the stiff. And in sadices and bittersess mean.	thing That strugglest vent within me unreproved A voice cress a voice faint with passior ing— "I am the heart, and I have never loved?" From the French of Louis flouithet.
For the victories of life seem turned to defeat. As we strive his right to maintain.	The Poodle and the Whip.
The world seems governed by tride and decent. And we toll and struggle in rate	A friend of mine knew of a gentle man who had a poodle dog possessed of
