MISS D. L. MOORE, the renowned evangelist, closed his mission labors in England, June 23 and in a few days will start for the United States. He will probably spend the summer at his home in New England, resorting from time to time for the past year, and getting ready for the work which he is expected to begin in Cincinnati next winter. His coming is anticipated with much interest by the various religious denominations. What the possibilities of his labors in that city may be has been ascertained from the fact that thirty-five thousand persons have been converted at his meetings in England the past year.

PERHAPS those who want to go to Europe without crossing the ocean may be interested in the fact that a railroad shall be constructed along the Pacific coast to the extremity of Alaska, where a ferris wheel would connect with the coast line. The system, which would be extended to the Siberian side of Behring's strait. As the strait is only 45 miles wide between East Cape, Alaska, and West Cape, Siberia, it is a very narrow channel. Wales, this distance in a swift steamer would be trifling even for the victims of sea-sickness. Parlor cars transferred to the steamers might practically give a overland route from New York to St. Petersburg without changing.

KATE FIELD, although not a woman suffragist, would not have the women taken away from the women of Utah. She protests against the injustice of disenfranchising one sex and giving the right of suffrage to the other. She says that the women of Utah are not equally guilty, and she draws attention to the fact that it was not women who were implicated in the Mountain Meadows massacre or any other of the crimes against law and order in the territory. Her sympathies are with the Mormon women who are deluded, oppressed and in constant danger. She hopes that no eastern woman will sign the petition to congress praying for the disfranchisement of the women of Utah. Her evidence in the territory gives her opportunity to see the real status of Mormon women and her opinions are worthy of consideration.
