

How Steel Pens are Made.
First the steel is rolled into big sheets. This is done in a mill where the steel is heated to a red heat and permitted to cool very gradually so that the brittleness is all removed and the steel is soft enough to be easily worked. Then the strips are rolled to the required thickness, or, rather, thinness, for the average steel pen is not thicker than a sheet of thin paper. Next, the blank pen is cut out of the flat strip. On this the name of the maker or of the brand is stamped. Next, the pen is molded into form which combines gracefulness with strength. The rounding enables the pen to hold the requisite ink and to distribute it more gradually than could be done with a flat blade. The little hole which is cut at the end of the slit serves to regulate the elasticity, and also facilitates the running of the ink. Then comes the process of hardening and tempering. The pen is heated to a cherry red and then plunged suddenly into some cool substance. This causes the quality of the metal to change. The quality of the metal from a soft, lead-like substance to a brittle, springy one. The temper of the steel must be drawn for without this process it would be too brittle. The drawing consists of heating the pen until it reaches a certain color. The first color that appears is a yellow color. This is the tempering color. The elasticity of the metal varies with the color, and it is at this point by instant plunging in cold water. The process of drawing, polishing, and tempering is done in a series of operations requiring dexterity, but by long practice the workmen and workwomen become expert. There have been few changes of late years, and the pen is made in much the same way that it was twenty years ago, and the prices are rather uniform, ranging from seventy cents to $1.50, according to the quality of the finish.

Beating Into The Theater.
"Say, mister, gimme yer check," greeted a fat reporter at the National Hotel, early evening when he dropped out from the acts to enjoy a cigarette.
The speaker was a street gammer of a most pronounced type, and his eyes twinkled as there was toward him the mystic piece of parchment entitled the permit to admission to the performance at the National Hotel.
"Well, times have changed," said an old lounge at the gallery entrance, as he signed a cigarette.
"Why?" asked the reporter.
"Well, a few years ago, when I was a 'cigar' smoker, we didn't take no exchange of getting into a show. The doorkeeper used to give out plain tickets, upon which some name was stamped in ink. The boys would make up a pool and send one who could be trusted to come out again up to the ticket. In a few minutes he would come out with a check and show it to the doorkeeper. Sometimes the mark was a plain cross, then again it would be a star, or something equally contented. What did we do about it? Simply duplicated this mark by cutting it on the bottom of a piece of cork. Then we carried the cork and the blank ticket, stamped nearly all the boys would get hold of red, white, and yellow, or some other color of blank tickets, and every night these would be compared with the tickets issued by the theater kids. Instead of paying 25 cents for a ticket, they would probably get, say, 10 or 20 cents, and give it to the owner of the stamp for the evening, and he would put on the required mark. The check was seldom refused, but after while the doorkeeper dropped on us and we were quit. Now they change the checks every night and use an advertisement of some business house, which we can't imitate. Lots of fellows around Washington, D. C., who could make an effort to pay their way, but they liked to beat in Washington, D. C."

Sewing Women.
Social science presents many perplexing problems, but there is none more difficult of solution than the mystery of the sewing women. From the time of the "Song of the Shirt," even until the present year of grace and the Republic, men have been unconsciously of the notion that it is not shirts but women who sew them.
With a periodicity like that of sunspots and Presidential elections, there comes the time when the sewing women are the subject of newspaper accounts of the needle's point as the source of 20 or 25 cents a day for men who sleep from dawn to midnight. There is reason to think that these stories of starvation and poverty are true, and it is beyond question that the women who make shirts and waists and undersuits for the world are shamefully low wages. And yet if any gentleman who reads this paragraph is so inclined to call in on the sewing women, he will find a sewing woman to help her at home, a needle and machine, she will find an astonishingly rich market, and, if sewing, he will find a disengaged, or likely to be disengaged at an early day. She must pay her $2 or $2.50 per day, and must be able to sew must be exceedingly polite and courteous to the honored guest if she is to keep her place in the sewing is done.
Many a gentleman's head has been made to ache in the endeavor to solve this mystery. If there are women who sew for 25 cents a day and board themselves, how and why is it that sewing women are so hard to find who are board and distinguished consideration thrown in? For less than 25 cents a day, with 25-cent women go out to sew. And if the sewing labor market is so overstocked as to put wages down to starvation rates, why is it that the competition make itself felt in the shape of an order to pay for the sewing of a pair of trousers for a lady for the service?—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Pearl Fisheries on the Pacific Coast.
The pearl fisheries of the Gulf of California are raising into importance and may become as rich as those of Ceylon and the Bahrein Gulf. About two years ago President Gonzalez gave a concession to an American company, which has since taken out more than $1,000,000 in value of pearls and mother of pearl, according to the former estimate of ninety-three pearls perfect in form and color, just taken from the Loran market, and destined to form ray fisher's tender pearls from some of the most important oysters, and be henceforward the rare and costly pearls of the world. These pearl fisheries of the Middle Pacific waters are as likely to be some source of as much revenue to the great nation of the North, and to the good of the world, as the Ceylon pearls have been productive for many centuries, and so the Central American pearl fisheries, without the product being diminished, and there is no reason to think that the California waters must not be equally fertile and enduring.—Brisley's Eagle.
