GROUP FORMED AT FRANKLIN

Social Function Planned For Wednesday By Society At Village

Plans are under way this week for the first social affair to be held by the village of Franklin for all the residents by Ross Adams, newly elected president of an organization to promote social affairs. The organization will be given a name at an early date, it is understood.

Date for the first social is set for next Wednesday evening at the town hall. Other officers elected are: Mrs. Josephine Hood, first vice president; Miles Austerbury, second vice president; Seba Bristol, secretary; Florence Bingham, treasurer. James B. Wood was general chairman of the meeting last week when the group was organized.

Several attempts have been made at Franklin to organize a similar group but this was the first successful one.

Residents of the village said they believed there had been need for a similar organization for some time and that it would unite the people of Franklin through social ties.

Theaters

CASS

The many thousands of out-of-town theatergoers who have been unable to purchase seats for the Schwab and Mandel production of "Good News" now current at the Cass Theater, Detroit, will be interested to know that the engagement has been extended two weeks longer, coming to an end on Saturday night, Feb. 18th.

"Good News" was originally booked at the Cass Theater for four weeks. It became an instantaneous hit and the engagement was lengthened to six weeks. The demand for seats is still so insistent during the sixth week that arrangements have been completed to hold this dashing musical play of youth, laughter, song, dance and an occasional tear over for the additional two, or eight weeks all-told.

Age and youth thrill to the lilting tunes of "Good News," which fills an unusual niche in the theatrical world. If you have not heard "The Varsity Drag," "Good News" or "Lucky in Love" you have missed much real enjoyment. During the remainder of this and for the next two weeks there will be matinees Wednesday and Saturday.

LAFAYETTE

All the water which Langdon McCormick's stage mechanics spray upon Blanche Yurka in "The Squall" which begins its second and final week at the Shubert-Lafayette Theater, Detroit, next Sunday night, does not crack the veneer she disposes on the role of an affectionate, pious, woe-betide-stricken lady of old Granada who is compelled to stand by like a sailor while she watches her husband, son and servants trail a hip-swaying gypsy down a Spanish flirtation walk. If she proves nothing more, and really she does, she proves that melodrama is the better for fine acting.

She is not, as the general impression goes, of foreign birth. She was born in St. Paul of Czech parents and was brought East when she was ten years old. Her introduction to the stage was a year of understudying under the careful hand of David Belasco. Then came a long succession of failures, which she thinks did her a great deal of good and made her appreciate the more that she considers her first real part,—in Jane Cowl's "Daybreak."

She next played in the brief "The Wife With a Smile," which the Theater Guild produced. She remained with that organization to play the part of the Woman in "Man and the Masses." Her liking for extremes led her to the Arthur Hopkins' production of "Hamlet," with John Barymore. For two seasons Miss Yurka played the Queen Mother role. Then came the Actors' Theater production of Ibsen's "The Wild Duck," in which Miss Yurka scored a great personal triumph.

Then came "The Sea Woman" in which the actress was credited with giving a superfine performance in a very ordinary play. From that epic she went into the Theater Guild's "The Goat Song."

If there are faults in the chronological order of appearances, as related here, they are Miss Yurka's. She combines off-stage memory with on-stage, retaining only the best features of both. She will not forget her lines, but she will not remember just what she has played and when.

BONSTELLE

For the first time in stock, "The Devil in the Cheese," by Tom Cushing, will be produced in the Bonstelle Playhouse, opening Monday night, with George Blackwood and Eden Gray in leading roles, and Craig Ward and Walter Sherwin in interesting character parts. This charmingly nonsensical melodrama was produced by Charles Hopkins at the Charles Hopkins Theater in New York last year, with stage settings designed by Norman Be-Geddes, who was with Miss Bonstelle for a time and is a Detroit boy. The play had a long and successful run, and drew much favorable attention during its five months of playing.

The scene is laid in the wild mountains of Greece, where bandits abound and where antiques are splendid. A wealthy archaeologist brings his wife and daughter to an out-of-the-way spot to help him dig for buried treasures of past civilizations. With him he also brings the colorless young doctor, his selected son-in-law, but his daughter proves obstinate and prefers to fall in love with a daring young admirer who crashes into their midst by the simple expedient of running his airplane into the walls of the monastery where they are staying. The second act is the choice morsel of the play, for here the father is conducted on a tour of his daughter's mind by a green devil whom he involuntarily invokes by eating a bit of mummied cheese. Her thoughts make a series of delightful scenes, filled with humor and romance. The third act takes an unexpected twist, and gives the young aviator a chance to win the hand of the girl he loves. Excitement abounds throughout the play, and the colorful scenes are filled with laughter and young
