Funeral was held at the house, the Rev. W. W. Lowe officiating. Deceased leaves a wife and two daughters to mourn his loss, and a large number of friends who will miss him greatly.

The new lot of Bird & Handing, the loss of which of Pontiac, appears in this issue, making mention of seasonal goods. Their custom department is presided over by the always genial Peter, whom there is no longer man or better, rather in the state. When you want "calls" on Bird & Handing.

You cannot fail to see the ad of Tompkins, the fine furniture dealer of this city, who is now in town, when they removed to their present address near the Presbyterian church. The funeral was largely attended on Tuesday last, Rev. J. McKee officiating, and the interment in the Mt. Hill cemetery at Pontiac. Possessor, an amiable and worthy man, was endeared to every one with whom she was acquainted.

There is a steady growing interest in all that pertains to an authentic history of the great rebellion—the most thrilling and bloody drama of the century.

A war so gigantic, enduring for four years, and costing the lives of more than a million men, and reaching almost every household in the land, must ever remain the greatest of the past, and the one that has shaped the destinies of the present.
