AB SUSPECTS IN DEB'S CAR

Two Men Discovered In Auto Stolen From Janet Skae

Recovery of a stolen automobile, property of Miss Janet Skae, debutante daughter of Mrs. Edward Askin Skae, of Bloomfield Hills, led to the arrest Thursday of Loven Petree, 20 years old, 990 Collingwood avenue, Detroit, on a robbery armed charge and furnished clues to at least one hold up.

Petree was arrested at Keller and Dubois avenues in Detroit when Patrolmen William Campbell and Harry McDonald, of the Belle Park Station recognized Miss Skae's large roadster. His 22-year-old companion was taken to the Juvenile Detention Home. According to police, a 32-caliber revolver was found in the car.

Theft of Miss Skae's car Monday night from the vicinity of the Brook-Cadillac Hotel had been reported to the police with the license number.

Wednesday a bandit driving Miss Skae's car held up a Coolidge highway confectionery store.

The WORLD and All

By CHARLES B. DRISCOLL

WORDS, WORDS, WORDS

Professor Craigie has come over from England, settled down in Chicago, and is addressing himself to the task of making an American dictionary.

I am for him. If ever he runs out of words for his dictionary, I hope he will call upon me. I would be pleased to give him a fine collection of Kansas words for his monumental work. I trust Kansas words will not be barred. I kept a notebook on the Kansas language while I was editing a newspaper in that Unparalleled state, and I collected the roots and some of the stems of a highly flavored language that grows out of the soil with the wheat and bubbles out of the sand with the oil.

The Kansas language is as plentifully redundant as the New England language is sparse and economical. An oven is a bake oven. A pane is a window light. A river is bank full, instead of being merely full. A church is a church house. A shovel is a scoop shovel. A certain article of clothing, not yet defunct in Kansas, is under drawers. Whatever is under is in under, and whatever is back is in back. A hillside, by some strangely picturesque metamorphosis, becomes a side hill.

Chicago is an excellent part of entry for a scholarly Englishman whose ambition compasses the monumental task of producing a truly American dictionary. American dictionaries should be made in the midlands, where Americanisms are more likely to come drifting in on vagrant breezes.

In Chicago you can go down to the Union station and meet Americans whom we Kansans can understand. These people ought to have some of their words in the American dictionary, it seems to me.

Do we need anything worse than we need an American dictionary? I hardly think so. Of course, we need a big and thoroughly American encyclopedia, too. But let us not become too ambitious. If Mr. Craigie can build us an American dictionary comparable in extent and scholarship with the Oxford English dictionary he had a part in creating, possibly we can find some other English scholars who will come over and make us a complete and dependable encyclopedia. I don't mean a toy one, but an encyclopedia of at least 50 or 60 volumes, not compiled by college boys. I'm sure writers and students would appreciate that kind of a reference work.

* * *

Chiefly, for the present, I'm interested in the experiment of an able foreigner going earnestly to work upon the colossal job of building a complete and honest American dictionary. A dictionary with Kansas words in it, and words from Georgia and Arkansas and Oregon. I find existing dictionaries quite interesting, but devoid of strictly American words.

The National Library

THE National library, as the Library of Congress at Washington sometimes is called, is the largest institution of its kind in all the Americas.

This treasure house of knowledge covers three and one-half acres of ground, has about eight acres of floor space which contains more than 3,500,000 books, occupying more than 150 miles of shelving, covering every subject under the sun. Almost 200 nations are represented in this stupendous collection—China and Russia leading the foreign list with more than 87,000 and 80,000 volumes respectively, Japan and Scandinavia following with more than 9,000 and 5,000 respectively. In addition, there are upwards of 200,000 maps and charts, 500,000 photographs and prints and 1,000,000 musical scores.

Bookdom in its every phaze is completely represented here. For instance, the oldest book printed from movable type—Duranti's Rational Durinorium Officiorum was printed in Mainz in 1459, which was 23 years before Columbus discovered America; the smallest book, which incidentally is said to be the smallest in the world, is a copy of the Rubiyat of Omar Khayyam, which contains 48 pages, each about one-half inch square; the largest book probably is Audubon's Birds of North America, in four volumes, its pages being about three feet high.

A normal day's receipts, counting Sundays and holidays, includes approximately 373 books and pamphlets, 80 maps, 40 musical compositions, 13 prints and 1,000 newspapers and periodicals.

An Ohio man has invented an electric signal device which enables people to find seats in movie theaters without the aid of ushers. We hope it's equipped with some sort of silencer for those who will not be content until they explain to their neighbors how it works.
