VILLAGERS and the VILLAGE

By THE WANDERER

Birmingham Returns this week started an attendance contest, to last for nine weeks. The affair will be conducted along the lines of a baseball game, with four teams contained in David Ladd, Al LaBelle, Chas. Ritchie and George R. Averill. The two lowest teams will pay for the dinner of the winning team, while the second team will neither pay for nor have purchased for it by others, its dinner.

The Village Commission set a new record for brevity Monday night when it transacted its entire business in 15 minutes flat, 12 minutes under the previous low mark. Correction of the minutes of the previous meeting, approval of the bills, deputization of a clerk to handle registrations in the absence of the regular clerk, and granting of a beverage license were the only matters up for consideration.

The trunk of a tree is an unusual place for fire, to say the least, but to the trunk of a tree—a large hollow tree at Ridgedale and Adams roads—Birmingham firemen were called Tuesday night to extinguish an well-started conflagration, apparently caused by children. Several gallons of water did the trick.

The second hole-in-one of the season at Bloomfield Township Park was made Sunday by Arthur T. Stone, 43 Fairwood Boulevard, Pleasant Ridge, on the 202-yard seventh, using a driver. Stone was playing in a foursome with his wife and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Richardson of Detroit.

WE HEARD IT SAID BY—

Dr. Fred L. Lather, former member of the Village Commission: "Every time Bloomfield Township pays out a dollar for sewer connections, you may bet that from 40 to 45 cents of it is paid direct by citizens of Birmingham, who, if they changed to the city, would be relieved of this expense."

The Credulous Creditor

"What is a debtor, pa?"

"And what is a creditor?"

"The man who thinks he's going to get it."—Nebraska Pelter.

No Matter What

"Mother, there's a blind man at the door."

"Tell him we don't need any."—Northwestern Purple Parrot.

Our Guess Is Fifty-Fifty

"How is your garden getting along, old man?"

"Well, if the green things coming up are vegetables, it's fine; but if they're weeds, it's terrible."—Boston Transcript.

Capital Ponders Garner's Wish To Be Vice-President

Friends Believe He Hopes To Invest Post With New Importance

By CHARLES P. STEWART
Central Press Staff Writer

WASHINGTON—The congressional atmosphere is filled with speculation as to the reason for Speaker Garner's willingness to change his presiding officership of the House of Representatives for the vice president's gavel in the Senate.

John Garner

The concensus seems to be that the Texan thinks he can invest the vice-presidency with an importance it never has possessed hitherto.

If so, it is understandable that an ambitious statesman should prefer the post of White House understudy to the speakership, on the off chance that the former may land him directly in the executive mansion.

On no other supposition are the associates of the Lone Star lawmaker readily able to account for his acceptance of second place on the Democratic national ticket. His transfer of his voting strength in the Jeffersonian convention to Governor Roosevelt is regarded by them as explicable enough, as a sacrifice of his possibilities of personal advantage in the interests of party solidarity, but they do not see that it was essential for him to relinquish the speakership—as he must do in the event of a Democratic victory next November—for a traditionally far less influential post, unless he believes he can give it a rating at least comparable with the one he will have to surrender in its favor.

* * *

THE SUGGESTION is advanced from some sources, to be sure, that Garner views the vice-presidency as a highly honorable and tolerably well paid form of political retirement, which it is assumed that he perhaps welcomes with advancing years, and expects to enjoy—not unmindful of the executive mansion as a contingency in the background of accident.

This consideration undoubtedly outweigh four year ago and certainly still weighs with Vice-President Curtis.

Those who confuse Speaker Garner's attitude with Vice-President Curtis', however, assuredly err in their reckoning to allow for the utter dissimilarity between the respective motivations of the Texan veteran and the likable old Indian from Kaw country.

Curtis, in the first place, is 72; Garner not yet 63, and temperamentally as far from the instinct of retirement as the average man 20 years his junior—in fact he omits to mention the date of his birth from his autobiographical section of himself in the Congressional Directory, due to an actual disinclination to admit how old he is.

* * *

THE TEXAN, moreover, quite gravely loves power.

Probably Curtis also liked it, but not as Garner unmistakably does.

The Kansan, odd as it may appear, is inordinately fond of "publicity"—as was sufficiently proved by the wholeheartedness with which he shared in the prolonged fight waged between his half-sister, Mrs. Dolly Gann, the head of his household, and Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, during her late husband's last term in the speaker's chair, over the issue of drawing room precedence in the capital.

In his day, an exceedingly shrewd politician, the vice-president yielded his senate leadership evidently without a pang, to take over the duties of social representative of the administration in his present office.

Politics was a business with him, as he grew old he tired of it.

With Garner it is a passion. For the social whirl he has an indifference amounting to unconcealed contempt. Compelled, as speaker, to dip into it occasionally, his only recourse has been to treat his as infrequent-as-possible ventures out of an evening in full dress regalia, in the light of a joke on himself—which he makes the best of, but leaves at with the only too obvious air of a man who wishes someone else were its victim.

* * *

CURTIS, then, took the vice-presidency as he found it, and has made it an end in itself.

Garner, to find it endurable, unquestionably will have to transform it into something suited to his tastes and long training—or, rather, to change it back into what it originally was intended to be, a position second only in political importance to the presidency itself.

Whether or not he can accomplish this, if elected, remains to be demonstrated.

He will not, assuming that the opportunity to make the experiment is accorded to him, be the first incumbent to make the essay. General Dawes, it will be recalled, tried it, and merely elicited guffaws of raucous daughter in response to his attempt to lay down the law to the senate on the day he was inaugurated. Long before his time the same thing was tried in much the same way and with substantially the same result by Col. Theodore Roosevelt, at the beginning of President McKinley's first and tragic second administration.

* * *

DUE ALLOWANCE must be made, however, for the fact that Speaker Garner is perhaps the most adroit politician of his generation, with the decades of congressional experience behind him—a background possessed by neither the late T. R. nor by the not overly tactful Chicago banker.

The Texan, besides, is a man of singular openness of mind. He has decided ideas, but he has likewise an adaptability to which General Dawes at least is a stranger.

Garner generally is spoken of indeed, as a conservative, but his conservatism by no means is as deep-seated as, for example, the Chicagoan's.

That is to say, it has no basis like that of some conservatives', upon the influences of early education—if for no other reason than that the Lone Star statesman had practically no education whatever of an academic nature. It has no basis, either, as with still other conservatives, upon personal interests calling for maintenance of the political and economic status quo. Presumably it rests upon a canny caution, an unwillingness to risk readjustments which have not been fully tested—but by no means upon ingrained prejudice or selfish considerations.

The speaker, in brief, is wary of radical changes but can be converted by sound reasoning.

* * *

FROM THE STANDPOINT of the schools, he is downright ignorant.

From the standpoint of practical experience, there is not a better informed man in the public life of today.

Naturally exceedingly keen of mind, his odd combination of poverty in book learning and wealth in knowledge of the ways of the world and particularly of government gives a remarkable elasticity to Garner's mental processes. They are all his own—completely independent.

If he believes he can "manage" the Senate, and is given the opportunity to put his belief to the test, the mere circumstance that others have undertaken to do so and failed proves nothing at all in so far as John N. Garner is concerned.

State Fair To Hold Popularity Contest

DETROIT—Michigan in September is to learn who is its most representative girl. She will be selected from among more than 2,000 of the state's finest young womanhood entered in the competition. Discovering "Michigan's Own Girl," as she is to be called, will be a feature of the Michigan State Fair and Exposition, Sept. 4 to 10.

The task of selecting "Michigan's Own Girl" already has started. The Butterfield theater interests and local newspapers in 35 upstate cities have begun the campaign to locate her. A leading Detroit newspaper and the eight Public theaters in the Metropolitan district are seeking "Miss Detroit."

The selection of "Michigan's Own Girl" will take place on Wednesday evening, Sept. 7, at the fair, the judging to be done by a clergyman, society woman, doctor, educator and artist.

No bathing suit parade will be held in connection with either the earlier trials or the final selection. The girls, in the eliminations and at the State Fair, will be chosen because of personality, education, athletic ability, domestic aptness and general character.

WE HEARD IT SAID BY—

Robert K. McClellan, local businessman: "There is nothing quite so soothing as the quiet and restful scenes of the wilderness. When I go up north the very forests, streams, and even the sky seem to shout to me: 'become contented and less hurried, now that you are away from the man-made affairs of a busy-busy world.' A trip to the woods gives me newness of life and regeneration of purpose."
