White Would Alter Method Of Amending Constitution

Kansas Editor Advocates Plan To Prevent Minority From Dominating Nation

By CHARLES P. STEWART

WASHINGTON—Attorney General William DeWitt Mitchell, who rates as one of the best lawyers in the United States, having just broadcast his view concerning "Methods of Constitutional Amendment in Particular Relation to Prohibition Proposals," the occasion strikes me as singularly appropriate for a broadcast of the constitutional ideas of an individual whom I regard as one of the greatest editors.

Wm. Allen White

I mean William Allen White of the Emporia (Kan.) Gazette.

Some time ago Editor White published an editorial expressing his opinion that the pressure of wet sentiment was reaching the danger point, due to lack of a means of testing itself and thus proving, to its own satisfaction as well as the satisfaction of others, whether or not it was in an actual majority.

Not only as coming from a dry (since I take it that the Kansan so classifies) but because Editor White is Editor White, this seemed to me an interesting utterance and I wrote to its author, asking him what he thought ought to be done, the constitution being as it is. His reply I used in quotation marks, with a few comments of my own, which implied, as the Sunflower newspaper man remarked, in a subsequent letter he acquitted me of serious blame, on the ground of the human tendency to "see things through the color of the issues."

Editor White's Plan

However, the main point is that he accompanied his criticism with a constitutional discussion that I feel should not be wasted on anyone's letter file, even though he did say it was not for publication; there is nothing intrinsically confidential in it, and it is so pat that I am sure he will not mind its use as a contribution to the pending controversy.

"What I am trying to do," wrote Editor White, "is to agitate for an amendment to the constitution that may be used not only now but in years to come when similar crises arise.

"I don't hold for any three-fourths of the states. I would provide for a mandatory petition to Congress which would call for a direct vote referendum. The mandatory petition could be signed by a majority of both houses in the legislatures in two-fifths, not three-fourths, of the states, providing those two-fifths of the states had a majority of the population of the United States. Then any section—East, West, North or South—which felt itself aggrieved, could try its strength and see if it really represented a majority or a minority. If it failed to get the legislatures in two fifths of the states having a majority of the population of the United States, it would then decide it was a minority and shut up, and go to agitating until it could convince enough people to get the mandatory petition going.

"Then, after the mandatory petition had gone to Congress and a referendum had been ordered for a direct vote, we should after all have to consider that this is a compact of states and that a law passed merely by a majority of the people of the United States would meet opposition in the Senate, where each state is still represented by two senators.

Three-Fifths' Majority

"So that, for a workable, satisfactory referendum, not only on prohibition but upon a dozen things that might be as critical as prohibition in the coming years, a majority of the people of the United States should also include a majority of the people in a majority of the states, but not a three-fourths majority; I should say three-fifths majority, which would be 25 states.

"It would be unfair obviously for a purely sectional majority of the people of the United States, however unanimously they might feel about a proposition, to dominate the people of the states. So long as the Senate had to pass on the legislation directed by the referendum, the referendum would be abortive if it did not include a majority of the people in a majority of the states.

"I would gladly rather see the right to a referendum in the constitution, properly safeguarded and providing for two or three years of debate, than to see any other economic or political measure survive so perfect a safety valve which will hold the republic together by proving to minorities that they are merely minorities and that they should sit down and be good after their agitation has failed to establish their right to go to the people because they are demonstrated minorities."

We See

You see, paying 2 per cent of her budget as war debts will ruin Europe because she pays 40 per cent for armament.—St. Joseph News-Press.

Plenty

A politician this season won't need to get his ear to the ground to hear plenty.—Nashville Banner.

Might Be

It will be well for friend Germany, however, not to get the impression that she can settle for any more wars at 1 cent on the $1.—Western Oregon Leader.

Evidently

Lady Astor says Americans do not understand Europeans. Evidently they don't, or Europe would never have been successful in borrowing so much money over here.—Greensboro Herald-Journal.

"Matter" was the subject of the lesson-sermon in all Christian Science Churches throughout the world on Sunday, Sept. 18. Among the Bible citations was the passage (11 Peter 3:13): "Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for a new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."

Correlative passages read from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, included the following (p. 249): "When we realize that Life is Christ, neither in nor of matter, this understanding will expand into self-completeness, and all in God, good, and needed not other consciousness. Spirit and its spiritual ideas are the only realities of being. Matter disappears under the microscope of Spirit."

My New York

By JAMES ASWELL

For Central Press

James Aswell

NEW YORK—Composed in a subway:

Underground trains really don't run very fast, although they seem to be hurtling because the walls of the tunnel are so close.

Like motoring through the Holland Tube: you'd swear you were making 60, when the speedometer says 30.

The I. R. T. gets up to around 40 at times, but the average speed is slightly under 30.

The B. M. T. is slower, going 25 or less, but somehow traversing comparable numbers of miles in about the same time.

Subway types. . . . There is always the drunk, who usually talks to the car at large and avoids the trains during the rush hours; there's no place to stretch out. . . . Beggars apparently work in droves, concentrating on a single run, whereas they used to parcel out the routes; but the profession has become diluted with a bunch of amateurs.

And there is always the high school girl with horn-rimmed spectacles reading Caesar's Gallic Wars. . . . And the pretty one adjusting her skirts constantly. . . . And over-plump women; the vendors of reducing potions ought to concentrate on subway cars, for it seems that a greater part of the feminine tonnage of the town rides that way.

Particularly at the crowded times, when there isn't enough room even for thin folk.

You can ride 20 miles for a nickel. . . . It's worth a dollar, though—the ordeal. . . . With luck in traffic you can drive to Coney Island more quickly in an automobile than you can get there by subway; I've never been able to discover why, the trick being totally illogical.

One of the worst smells in New York is an overcrowded subway train; one of the best smells is the cellary coolness which arises through gratings of the as yet unopened Eighth Avenue line.

COMPOSED IN THE AIR

Man I know has traveled back and forth between Washington and New York by plane hundreds of times, but has never looked down upon Mad-hattan from anything higher than the Empire State tower. . . . Landings being made, as you know, in Newark.

Chewing gum is a good preventative for air sickness, but has little effect upon mal de mer. . . . The new planes permit passengers to smoke if agreeable to other passengers. . . . I have never been able to read anything but headlines in a plane, and I can't nap. . . . As a matter of fact, passengers who doze usually wakeen at the first nice air bump.

Manhattan is neither handsome nor impressive from 10,000 feet. . . . It looks like a medieval clown's putty nose, with a wen (the skyscraper cluster) on the tip. . . . But I never got directions and locations straight in my mind until I had seen the city from above. . . . At lower altitudes, the loony burg is unforgettable.

I wonder what J. P. Morgan would look like from 2,000 feet.

. . . Not, at any rate, like J. P. Morgan. . . . But I'll bet I could spot Groucho Marx, from the reflection in his glasses.
