Change

Picture of shabby Thespian, old, down-at-heel and no longer able to tred boards, is no more. Modern actor, statistics show, is storing up for rainy day by investing in endowment policies, annuities and trust funds. In show business, man has seen best days before 50, and women, before this. Prodigality of old days at height of youth and career, is giving place to conservative living and spending.

Among people of show world to go in rather heavily for old-age protection are Chic Sales, John Charles Thomas, Bert Wheeler, Vivienne Segal, Will Rogers, Willie Howard, Jack Dempsey, Morton Downey, Hapold Lloyd and others.

Trade Acceptances Viewed As Stimulus To Industry

By ROBERT V. FLEMING

President of Riggs National Bank of Washington, D. C.

[Robert V. Fleming was born in Washington, D. C., on Nov. 3, 1890, and was educated at George Washington University. He started to work for the Riggs National Bank in 1907 as assistant cashier, and worked to the position of president, which post he has held since 1925. He is a director and officer of many concerns, and was president of the District of Columbia Bankers' Association in 1928 and 1929.]

THERE IS no question but that the greater use of the trade acceptance will stimulate the flow of credit into commerce and trade.

In the past few months many large industrial concerns have adopted the practice of taking short term acceptances from responsible customers in payment for goods sold to them, and issuing trade acceptances promptly in payment for goods purchased.

The trade acceptance is the best known form of prime commercial paper, arising from a specific business transaction, bearing the names, as drawer and acceptor, of two solvent concerns. It is eligible for purchase or rediscount by the Federal Reserve banks and thus constitutes the legal basis for Reserve bank currency.

Since Federal Reserve currency—the main currency now in circulation—is primarily based on commercial paper, it is highly important that the banks of the country have eligible commercial paper in their portfolios, which they can rediscount with Federal Reserve banks in order that they may meet seasonal or other unusual demands from their customers.

In the last few years there has been a considerable shrinkage in the volume of prime commercial paper. The shortage of commercial paper has been due, in part, to the fact that in the boom period commercial houses financed their own business through the sale to the public of preferred and common stocks.

The method employed in handling a trade acceptance is a simple procedure. The seller of a bill of goods forwards with the invoice a trade-acceptance form showing the net amount of the bill and the date of payment, as previously agreed upon.

The buyer signs the trade acceptance across the face with the date and places of payment and returns it at once to seller, who is then in possession of a very desirable form of two-name commercial paper with a definite maturity date and eligible for rediscount at the Federal Reserve bank if maturing within 90 days.

The trade acceptance has certain definite advantages over the open-book account system, which is the common practice now in use. This practice places the seller under the burden of "carrying" the buyer, that is, extending his credit over a long period after the delivery of the goods.

Granting of credit is essentially the function of commercial banks, and not of manufacturers, wholesalers or jobbers. The seller who "carries" his customer on an open account has to secure funds for this purpose by borrowing on his single-name paper through the bank or note brokers.

A Fowling Game

A golfer played his approach shot. It was a bad hole and also rather bad shot. The ball lodged in a little ditch, just visible over the intervening knoll, gesticulated wildly for a moment.

"What's up?" said the golfer coming up to the green.

"You're holed out," said the caddie.

"Done it, by jove."

Sure enough, the ball was down. The player gave the caddie half a dollar. The next day every man who was with him that caddie did the same hole in two.—Exchange.
