Prophets on Broadway have ceased ominous head-waggings and are looking up with predictions of fair weather for legit shows during coming season. Not only on Broadway, but in road spots as well, wiseacres point cheerfully to improved outlook.

In N. Y., about 75 per cent of main theaters are booked with promising shows, some new and others hold-overs. Two in lead at present time are "Clear All Wires," sonsidy by Bell and Samuel Spewack, and "Flying Colors," revue by Howard Dietz and Arthur Schwartz.

Among shows in rehearsal are "Rendezvous," "When Ladies Meet," "Mademoiselle," "Criminal at Large," "Black Sheep," "Real Folks," "Forward Mach," "Music to the Air," "I Love You Wednesday," "Bidding High," "The Other One," "Singapore," "The Absent Father," "Cain's Sister," "Incubator," "Success Story," "The Good Earth," and "Manhattan Medley."

Hilarity

Good time was had by all at George M. Cohan's dinner for cronies in Hollywood Tavern recently. Lots of speeches, with Jack Oakie solemnly declaring himself and Stuart Erwin to be just couple of young saps among Big Shots. Motion seconded by Erwin, who rose to remark he and Oakie were just couple of young punks. "Make up your minds, guys," interrupted Groucho Marx. "What'll it be, saps or punks?"

Slanguage

"Trying it on the dog" is theatrical jargon for testing new show in tank town before taking it to Broadway. Saying is line from play by Charles H. Hoyt, leading writer of farce and satire 35 years ago, according to George M. Cohan. "Hoyt had scene in one of his plays," explains G. M. C., "where pair of comedians are concocting presentation in drug store. When one questions effect mixture would have other suggests glancing at pair's hound, 'Let's try it on the dog.'"

From A WOMAN'S ANGLE

By MARJORIE BLAIR LESTER

A week ago we published in this column four different points-of-view as to what constitutes popularity in the modern girl in the opinions of the high school boy, college student and two young men of the world.

To satisfy the curiosity, which we hope they possess, as to what, in return, makes a young man popular with the modern girl, we asked several attractive girls of our acquaintance in Birmingham, from high school age on, to contribute their ideas.

Marjorie E. Porter

Looking them over, it seems apparent that in spite of all this head-wagging about the frivolities of modern youth, these girls are mature, sane and quite articulate in defining their "ideals."

It's also quite apparent that the beep-a-doop-boy doesn't get to first base in the game of popularity to win the modern girl.

—o—

This is what a Birmingham high school girl likes in boys of her acquaintance:

"The boy of my choice must be at least intelligent looking. A certain amount of brains would be a requisite, and that he was able to use them would be apparent in his conversation.

"No girl can tolerate rudeness or thoughtlessness. General opinion has it that girls are the gossips, but some boys are just as prone to talk over the girls they have been out with. The thing I don't like is when it gets back to the girl, as it invariably does. I hate the 'reform' type of boy. I smoke and see no harm in it, and I certainly object to the boy who either won't let me smoke in his company, or raves about how bad it is.

"The boy of my selection won't drink. I draw the line at that. And above all other requirements, he would be clean-minded. Most of these characteristics are apparent on a date—another is the ability to dance well. I don't think it is too much to say that most of the older high school girls are considering the future. They expect a boy to have some idea for the future."

—o—

And here is an expression of choice in men from a university student, who likes sincerity and pipes:

"The man whom I bow before will be above all else, sincere! Deceit is hateful in a woman; in a man it is unforgivable. He will be clean physically and mentally, so that no time will he lose his self-respect and allow himself to be trampled on by men less worthy.

"He will have a sense of humor that will make him see the amusing side of life, and will help him to keep his courage. He will take himself seriously, but not so seriously that he will fail to see and to understand the people around him. He will be interested in people and in the things that people do.

"He will enjoy the things that will make his life worth while—will be above all else, sincere! Deceit is hateful in a woman; in a man it is unforgivable. He will be clean physically and mentally, so that no time will he lose his self-respect and allow himself to be trampled on by men less worthy.

"He will have a sense of humor that will make him see the amusing side of life, and will help him to keep his courage. He will take himself seriously, but not so seriously that he will fail to see and to understand the people around him. He will be interested in people and in the things that people do.

"He will enjoy the things that will make his life worth while—will be above all else, sincere! Deceit is hateful in a woman; in a man it is unforgivable. He will be clean physically and mentally, so that no time will he lose his self-respect and allow himself to be trampled on by men less worthy.

"He will work for the joy he derives from work, not because he feels that he has to work in order to live. He will be generous because he wants to share with his fellow men the things that make his life worth living.

"He will be broad enough to see his neighbor's view-point, yet he will be firm in his own convictions. He will not be influenced by the sentiments of those around him, but will make his decisions and act upon his own judgment to the best of his ability.

"If he has these things, he will deserve the respect that is shown him. He will not be vain or proud. He will accept consciously and graciously. He will be a man worth knowing.

"And he will, of course, smoke a pipe, dance divinely, concoct the smoothest of drinks, converse intelligently and humorously and have a fervent passion for circuses equal only to my own."

—o—

Here are a few thoughts jotted down in a soliloquizing mood by a young woman just recently out of college, and new in the world of economic independence:

"All kinds of perfect men and each one different in appearance and character. A man that is truly kind and understanding, who knows he can't have many bad faults or cause much unhappiness. He must be unselfish to take things as they come, to be interested in routine of habit and principal is perhaps commendable but surely not very exciting.

"When I meet the perfect man, and surely I will, I'll fall over, look the little things that bother me, and win him. For any girl who doesn't will be sorry."

—o—

This is a nutshell for of good meat. For many a married woman owes her happiness to a husband who is truly kind and understanding, who has been big enough to overlook many small frailties he may have, possess.

—o—

Here are some timely ideas from another young woman, who has finished her education and is also economically independent:

"An ideal boy of the modern type, in my estimation, is one who has a pleasing personality and good morals. To bring back the old days, he must be chivalrous. He must also be cool and level-headed, and use good judgment in any emergency.

"One of the most important things is a good education and the ability to carry on an intelligent and interesting conversation.

"No girl wants to listen to a boy constantly bragging and boasting about himself and what he has done. The modern boy should be something of an athlete and interested in all kinds of sports.

"I would want him to be a good dancer, attractive and wear his clothes well. He must be very modern and up-to-date in his ideas. And there are several things which my ideal would not do. For instance, he would not be conceited nor pondering in his manner towards anyone. A trivial matter would never cause him to lose his temper and be mean and disagreeable.

"And here's another young woman who characterizes her ideal as an array of wholesome qualities, Honesty, Ambitious, Sympathetic, Altruism, Courtesy, Trust, Patience, Reverence.

"Judging from the 'confessions' of both the boys and young women it would seem, they are searching for about the same things in each other!"

POLICE HALT LIQUOR PARTY ON WOODWARD

Mixing a highball while standing beside his car, parked on Woodward avenue Saturday night cost two men $25 and $15 each when they were arraigned before Judge Floyd S. Buck Monday on charges of disorderly conduct.

The men, who were arrested by Bloomfield Hills police, are Lawrence McBean, of Pontiac, and Norman Johnson, 118 Bessie avenue, Auburn Heights.

Vandal Wrecks Car To Steal Clothing

Police were called Friday morning to investigate vandalism on a car parked on Southfield road near Frank street from which a man's coat and vest had been stolen after the body of the car had been maliciously damaged.

The thief first took a knife and cut a large hole in the top, through which he apparently attempted to reach the lock on the door. Chief John P. Hackett said. Failing in this, he tore off the handles on both doors, but still was unable to gain an entrance.

Finally he broke the glass on one of the side windows and reached in to unfasten the lock, the chief said. The car and clothing belonged to William Clark of Butternut, Mich., who had stopped at the Southfield address to spend the night with friends.
