YOUTH.

FROM THE GERMAN OF KLOPSTOCK.

Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Breathless, Youth passed beside a silver stream
Wherein he saw his flower-crowned tresses
Waving, abundant, golden, in the gleam
Of sunlight tangled with their silken glimmer.
Rosy in hue his chaplet, like Aurora's fire,
Which, ere it rise, surprises finger tips
She kisses, to the fond old world,
Who, in her honor, wears his forehead, new Imprinted
Itself, the pictured vision, so impresses
Upon his memory, that he cannot be treated
For nearer view, and sweetly smiles
In the refracted face—begiuiling
The moments swiftly slipping by,
Nor upward looks, at the portentious sky.

Raging along the rugged mountain side,
A wild torrent came, with thunderous tread,
Oak, ash and fir plucked up, and scattered wide;
Resistless in his fury, to the summit sped,
And, from each trembling height
Began to crush and overwhelm
Whose clinging echoes through dark chasms, affright
The superstitious dwellers of the town.

Oblivious, so interested to his thought
Beside the brooklet, Youth in reverie lelds,
Nor heeds the appalling din with terror fraught;
But, fanned by flowers, through th' Elysian fields
Of dreamland wanders, nor does he awake
Till on the night ariseth Hesperus
In silvery veil, and from the brake
Some night bird's cry, plaintive, melodous,
Thrills to his soul—then doth he retake
Him to a shelter more secure.
Nothing of care as yet dost thou endure,
O blameless youth. Life, like the fitraces three,
Smiles only on thy zay inaocuiance;
Arise! with wisdom arm thee, for perchance
More speedily that thou think'st the flowers will fade,
And thou, without it, will be sore dismayed—
For storm and strife will yet encompass thee.

Miss Rose Chester.

Mrs. Dunning, of Sunnyside, West Kensington, always considered that she had been particularly fortunate in her lodgers. She had but two, and they had been with her ever since the decease of the lamented Dunning—a clerk in the customs, who returning home on a certain pay-day in November, with two bottles of wine in his outer coat and one in his inner one, fell into the Thames and was drowned—had compelled her to retire to the basement, and offer the upper portions of her house, at moderate rent, to "gentlemen of quiet habits, seeking a comfortable home in a pleasant suburban neighborhood." On the very day that Mrs. Dunning's advertisement appeared in the Daily Telegraph, Mr. Samuel Greeley, chief cashier in a government savings bank, engaged the sitting-room and the bedroom on the ground floor; and Mr. William Wylie, chief sub-editor of a local daily paper, engaged the front room and the bedroom on the first floor.

The day, I think, was Saturday—indeed, I know it have been, for Mr. Wylie, contrary to his habit on the other days of the week, was at home all the evening, and, at 9 p. m. the two gentlemen met in the passage, exchanged greetings, and entered upon a discussion on politics, which, becoming animated, resulted firstly in a withdrawal to the apartment of Mr. Greeley, and lastly in a copious libation of hot rum and water. Thus was begun an acquaintance which merged into friendship and deepened into mutual affection—Samuel and Will Wylie became sworn brothers. The cashier, at the time of this story, was about 53 years of age, and the sub-editor 54; and on the subjects of politics, finance and the Corn Laws, of prayer, religion, and the proper quantity of sugar for a bowl of punch, they had only such trifling differences of opinion as tended to preserve their intercourse from monotony. Mr. Greeley was away from home during the day, and Mr. Wylie during the night, so that the former was generally coming in at about the time when the latter was going out. Nevertheless, they managed to see a good deal of each other. Mr. Greeley always left Mr. Wylie in his arm-chair before he went out in the morning, and Mr. Wylie visited Mr. Greeley in his parlor before he went out in the evening. Saturday, however, was their favorite day. Then Mr. Greeley was a whole holiday with Mr. Wylie, and the two friends spent the hours of the evening together from Tea till midnight. Very quiet old fellows they were; never heard in the house except for about half an hour on Saturday evening, when Mr. Greeley brought out an aged flute, of which the lower keys were a little uncertain, and Mr. Wylie trolled an ancient love-song in a tenor voice, of which the upper notes were a trifle dubious. For eight years no unkind word had passed between them, and among the neighbors on either side their friendship had become a by-word. Certainly Mrs. Dunning had reason to say that she was fortunate in her lodgers.

At the top of the house were two tiny bedrooms. Mrs. Dunning occupied one of them; the other had long been untenanted.

On Monday evening Mr. Wylie knocked at Mr. Greeley's door on his way out and was admitted.

"News, Sam, news! and you'll never guess it!" exclaimed the sub-editor.

The chief cashier gave full rein to his imagination, and said:

"Mrs. Dunning going to take a second?"

"No."

"Your Aunt Belinda dead, and left you the £1,000?"

"No."

"Binkie been at the rum again?" Mr. Greeley's imagination was running dry.

Binkie was Mrs. Dunning's cat, which, when the spirits in the gentlemen's cupboards disappeared too rapidly, she was in the habit of accusing of libulous propensities.

"No."

"Then I can't guess any more, Will."

"What do you say to a new lodger?" queried Mr. Wylie.

"A new lodger here, in this house?"

"Yes, and a lady."

"A lady! Do you mean to tell me that Mrs. Dunning has let the little back bedroom to a single lady?"

"Yes, and a young lady."

"Dear me! this must be inquired into. We had better ring up Mrs Dunning. Mrs. Greeley 'serves!"

"Why, Sam, old boy, we're not afraid of a young lady, are we?" asked Mr. Wylie.

"Eh?—no, not afraid; but you know, Will, we have always held the opinion that woman—"

"So we have, Sam; especially when she's young."

"And you know, Will," went on Mr. Greeley, "that one of the conditions on which we let our lodgings with Mrs. Dunning was that no other lodgers were, and in particular no ladies, were to be admitted. I don't remember whether that affair at Hammersmith the other day, when a young woman took lodgings for one night in a respectable middle house, and nearly strangled an elderly gentleman in his bed in the middle of the night, was before or after us strong men, Will."

"Sam," said Mr. Sam, "I did not look at it in that light. Perhaps you had better have an explanation from Mrs. Dunning. Ring, Sam, and send a go. Good night. Don't get too low about it, old fellow, and bolt your bedroom door."

Mr. Wylie went out, and Mrs. Dunning brought in Mr. Greeley's tea-tray.

"What is this, Mrs. Dunning? A new lodger, and a lady?"

"Yes, Mr. Greeley, sir," said Mrs. Dunning, setting down the tray and interposing a couple of chairs between her lodger and herself. "But a buncomon case, sir—quite a case, as I said to myself directly up the stairs, quite a case to move Mr. Greeley's ire. The young lady—for I'm sure she is a lady, in case you and she will be kind enough old, and obligated to live alone before of a step-mother that uses her that shameful. Now, I'm sure, in the next room she say, through not likin' to meet on the stairs two young men which lodged there, but one, and he a married man, and. Gets her own livin' air, though she didn't say how, and desires of a quiet young in a respectable house, where kitchen fire is not a hextra, and a mother's influence, as you might say, sir, throwed in with the bargain."

"You say that she is young, Mrs. Dunning?"

"Says she's 18, sir, and don't look hardly that. Was going right away from there, I said to myself, as the gentleman, but came back when I said, quiet and calm, they was both old enough to be her father."

"Eh?" said Mr. Greeley; "old enough to be her—"

"Father, sir—you and Mr. Wylie, sir, and such lodgers, I said, as lately climbed through cruel forth' to' ist apartments at 25 shillings—which they'd be cheap at 50—was never afore blessed with. When I mentioned your ages, sir,—yours and Mr. Wylie's,—the young lady said she'd stay at once. The step on the box is Chester—Miss Rose Chester."

"And where is Miss Chester at this moment, Mrs. Dunning?"

"In the back kitchen, sir, a curlin' of her front hair."

"Thank you, Mrs. Dunning. You may go."

"Thankin' . . . I will."

TALKS WITH THE FARMERS.

Potato Seed.

American Cultivator.

Long before potatoes are to be planted the seed potatoes should be got out of the dark pits or bins in which they are necessarily stored during severe weather. Exposure to light for some time before planting is very important. If the planting is to be early the seed should be cut at once and spread thinly in a light, warm room, to allow the cut surfaces to harden. The seed will then be much less liable to rot if, as wet time comes after planting. The dangeness in the soil will find its assaults on the seed checked by the dry, calloused surface over the cut. If the potatoes are not to be planted until late, cutting the seed should be delayed until a few days before planting. It is a difficult matter to keep a large quantity of cut potato seed just right for a long time. If put in heaps, barrels or bags some of it will heat and spoil. If not put very long exposed to light and air the mother will all dry out of the cut pieces and they will appear like chips. In a moist state of these will grow, but should a dry time come just after planting, there will be sent failures. But in winter pieces planted early or late, seed potatoes should, from this reason, be exposed to light and air. The vigorous green shoots which will be just ready to push out when the seed is put in the ground will be so much gain, instead of a detriment, as are the pale, thin sprouts which push from potato seed in dark pits. These, besides robbing the potato of the substance on which the young plants must first depend before they can put forth roots for their own support.

Light Brahmas.

The origin of Brahmas, both light and dark, was probably the same, and a most respectable ancestry among the Asiatics. The breed came into prominent notice in America about the year 1850. The American light Brahmas differ in many respects from the English. They are, as a rule, longer in leg and back, feathered and show less pencillings in hackles. In these points they are considered inferior to the English birds. They excel, however, in purity of white and size. To obtain these points they have been from time to time introduced also some of the English birds, but thus far without very satisfactory results. English fanciers report light Brahmas as good layers in the winter months, and no amount of cold seems to diminish the fertility of their eggs. In England it is very desirable to get hatching over before the middle of April, if possible, so as to have the chickens up to eighter ten pounds weight for the autumn shows. The hens are mostly go on laying steadily up to about August, when they become broody. It is well to give them a dustbin's read on the coast, after which an early molt may be expected.

All English fanciers agree in admiring the shape and color of the light Brahma. No variety of fancy poultry shows to greater advantage on the meadow. They have, however, their drawbacks, one of which is that their feet feather becomes greatly damaged by running on long grass, and another that they must be well washed before they are sent to a show, or they would stand no chance of winning. They are considered as easy to breed as most other varieties, certainly more so than the dark Brahmas. They are beautiful to the eye and useful in an economical point of view. Above all they are the most easily tamed and give no trouble to their owner by straying away from home.

Experiments in Feeding.

A proposition has been made to the state board of agriculture and accepted by them, to make a thorough practical feeding barn at the agricultural college for the next two or three years for the purpose of testing the comparative feeding qualities of common and scrub cattle, just as many of the improved breeds as can be obtained; two calves of each to be selected and fed to their full capacity under direction of the professor of agriculture. The feed given to each will be carefully weighed and an accurate account kept with each animal and full records published. The cattle will be shown each year at the fairs and finally at the fat stock shows.

It is hoped that all the half-breeds may be represented. President Hinds and the Shorthorn breeders' association has promised to provide the Shorthorns for the purpose which will be selected by a committee appointed for the purpose. The Hereford and black-polled breeders will also provide specimens of these breeds the trial may become interesting. No doubt the Holstein or Friesian breeders would also like to be represented.

The experiment will be interesting and will be a battle of the breeds, but as an experiment in feeding, and if there is an advantage in improved breeds, as most good farmers believe, it will show what it is.

For this purpose, and for a comparison of the improved breeds, we should like to see the cattle lodgings with Mrs. Dunning was that no other cattle were, and in particular no ladies, were to be admitted. I don't remember whether that affair at Hammersmith the other day, when a young woman took lodgings for one night in a respectable middle house, and nearly strangled an elderly gentleman in his bed in the middle of the night, was before or after us strong men, Will."

"Sam," said Mr. Sam, "I did not look at it in that light. Perhaps you had better have an explanation from Mrs. Dunning. Ring, Sam, and send a go. Good night. Don't get too low about it, old fellow, and bolt your bedroom door."

Mr. Wylie went out, and Mrs. Dunning brought in Mr. Greeley's tea-tray.

"What is this, Mrs. Dunning? A new lodger, and a lady?"

"Yes, Mr. Greeley, sir," said Mrs. Dunning, setting down the tray and interposing a couple of chairs between her lodger and herself. "But a buncomon case, sir,—quite a case, as I said to myself directly up the stairs, quite a case to move Mr. Greeley's ire. The young lady—for I'm sure she is a lady, in case you and she will be kind enough old, and obligated to live alone before of a step-mother that uses her that shameful. HENRY WARD BEECHER'S BROTHER.

The Rev. Henry Ward Beecher is the best known living. One of these is the Rev. Charles Beecher, a younger brother of some of the most quaint and touching hymns in the English language. Another is the Rev. Edward Beecher, a profound theologian, far advanced in years, and living in Brooklyn, where he preaches from time to time. A third brother is the Rev. William Henry Beecher, who is spending the serene years of a mellow old age at his home, 6 Honore street, Chicago. Mr. Beecher is 84 years old, and, with the exception of the natural infirmities of age, is a hearty and vigorous old gentleman.

A gentleman from Chicago visited Mr. Beecher at his home, found him in an exceedingly genial frame of mind and by no means loquacious. He talked for a while of he had obtained from the rheumatism, which for many years had been a source of trouble to him. In reply to a question, the venerable gentleman remarked, "Why, rheumatism could be entirely driven away from an old man like me, who has had it for years. I have suffered with it myself and occasionally I feel its pains. Then I take more Athlophoros, and the pains are driven away. Even if it cannot entirely drive out the cause of pain from a man who has had it so long, it takes the pain away, and that is a great deal. I have had frightful pains at night, before going to bed. Then I would take a dose of Athlophoros, and I soon find the pain gone, so that I could enjoy a calm and refreshing night's rest.

"I believe Athlophoros will cure chronic rheumatism. I know that is saying a great deal for it; but I say it. A tough old case of rheumatism is hard to get rid of and to cure, I know. But see my hands; they are no longer swelled as they were. I am free from pain. I can sleep. I can eat well, and what more can an old man of 84 ask for?"

Mr. Beecher's daughter cheerfully confirmed what her father had said, and gave her testimony to the great advantages he had experienced from the use of Athlophoros.

For a number of years, Mr. C. H. Wetmore, of the well known wholesale clothing house of Messrs. Thompson & Wetmore, 124 & 126, Fifth avenue, Chicago, was greatly afflicted with rheumatism, which interfered not only with his personal comfort, but also with his ability to attend to business. He is now well.

Calling on Mr. Wetmore, at his store on Fifth avenue, Mr. Beecher's friend found him willing to converse as to his experience in regard to rheumatism.

"Yes," he said, "I am willing that you go and tell of your rheumatism by the help of Athlophoros. Is that true?"

"Well, I was troubled for a long while with rheumatism, and I had tried almost everything in the line of medicine. I may fairly say that I had almost finished the rheumatism, and finally overcame it. Some of the other remedies I tried were very fine, which proved only temporary and incomplete relief. But I am not so with the Athlophoros. Since I commenced using it I have had no more rheumatic pains, either in the night or day, or to interfere with my sleep I might. The rheumatism was at times severe. All my joints were swollen, as were very painful. I was detained at home sometimes as much as a month at a time, suffering pain and unable to attend to business. Now that Athlophoros has finished the rheumatism, I am happy to say that my health is perfect, that I have a regular and healthy, and I am every day attending to business."

Keeping Old Bills.

It is not generally known that every bill, every report, every executive communication,—in short, everything that comes before congress is preserved in the original. But such is the fact.

There is a place devoted to the preservation of these relics, and a man employed to take charge of them. The room is a succession of iron corridors, one above the other, filled with receptacles for holding large volumes.

Commencing on the roof of the house, the records run down in chronological order. The books are of all sizes down to about forty years ago, when they assume uniformity. They are all leather-covered, and are strongly bound. Inside of them are thick leaves upon which bills, reports, and other congressional documents are pasted in the original. Every kind of paper that has come before the body is there, down to the present day.

It is noted, too, in delving among these old tomes that the latter ones are not so well filled with the records of the British depredations. They are charred, and their contents smoked and covered with dirt. There is not a word in there in them that cannot be read. Thus, from the date of the first meeting of congress there is an almost unbroken collection of the records, including all the relics that came before that body. In later years a great deal of ingenuity has been shown in making up the form of the contents of the leather-backed volumes as smooth as those of any first-class publication.

The antiquity is the more apparent when it is remembered that all sizes and kinds of paper are used in preparing bills for congress, from the printing reports and other matters pertaining to congressional business. The originals, when ordered to be printed, go to the printer, and are returned in proper shape to securing a good crop. In localities where intense heat and drought come as the grain is ripening, the barley will be greatly injured. Climatic conditions limit the growing of barley to a comparatively small area.

The fire which occurred in the capitol when many householders have had to make fires in cellars to keep out frost while having no good means for letting out the smoke suggested the advantages of extending chimneys down to the bottom of cellars. Then a stove could be set in the cellar to warm it whenever needed, and the temperature be easily regulated. This also would give cellars better ventilation, as the air rising from it would be carried off by the chimney. A cut off draught should be provided to prevent the passage of cold air into the cellar during any freezing weather not quite cold enough to require extra fire in the cellar.

TWO VERY UGLY TWINS.

They go hand in hand, and lead their victim a terrible trot down into the valley of the shadow of death. One is neuralgia, the other rheumatism. These generally proceed from disordered blood. Brown's Iron Bitters knocks out these ugly twins by setting the blood aright and invigorating the system. W. T. Osborne, of Corville, Ala., used Brown's Iron Bitters for rheumatism and neuralgia with most happy effect. It also cures dyspepsia.

The Era of Gimcracks.

I have been up town lately, visiting a pretty large number of stores, whose business has a salary of $5,000 a year, and how jolly comfortable they might be on it if they were not permeated with the principles of this era of rot. Not long ago, I established themselves in a stock apartment-house where liveried servants held the door and run the elevator. The light of heaven reaches them through stained glass, and all is finished in gaudy green and purple on tessellated floors. They live in a series of closets, the smallest of them being the boudoir. But they have no end of drapery and hangings. They have bought, with no discrimination and less taste, a lot of pictures—real Daubinas. They have wonderfully tasteful; but the frames are already opening in every corner. They stand in fancy easels, and the veneers are peeling off and sticking out like so many onion skins. There's no end of silver-plating on the open grates and the doors of the establishment; but their friend, being of a neat turn, has polished it so thoroughly that after six months' occupancy the silver is all off and streaky black takes its place. The piano they still have been built cheap, two years, and a more shabbily put together edifice heart of man never contained. It is already out of tune. In three more years it will be a wrecked, dismantled wreck. The blamed little gingerbread decorations are peeling off, and the finishing mixture it's instal and cracking where it's painted.—New York Mirror.

The Lucky Man

Geo. A. Spear, the lucky man who drew the $75.000 in the Louisiana State Lottery, was met by The Tribune scribe on Ferry street in the post office. He has not changed any since the good news came, with the possible exception that his face is now often bedecked with smiles. The wealth so suddenly heaped upon him has not elevated his head above the common herd, and he talked to the reporter in the same old way. In answer to questions he said: "I will collect the money through the banks, the same as I would a draft, sending the ticket to the lottery office. As for future business, I am not fully decided upon, but I will make no change during the present summer anyway. I am clerking in the store yet, just as though nothing had happened."—Bay City (Mich.) Tribune, March 21.

Geo. A. Spear yesterday received a New York draft for $74,850, in payment of his claim against The Louisiana State Lottery. The exchange, collecting the $75,000 was $150.—Bay City (Mich.) Tribune, March 27

There is a color law in the floral world and nature abides by it. Bodanis's long ago discovered that certain colors were peculiar to plants; although no one has as yet been able to fix a fixed limit It is noticeable that bright scarlet, yellow and blue are never found in the same species of flowers. In roses, gladiolus and dahlias the latter have never produced blue although there are reds and yellows. In geraniums are found all shades of red to white, but no blue. Pansies come in all shades of blues and yellows but no scarlet, and in verbenas, lobelias and larkspurs, blues and scarlet are produced but no yellow. Look over the list of flowers, and it will be found that this law of nature is strictly recognized.

That you should not allow the sickness and weakness which are sure to follow if you neglect to take Hood's Sarsaparilla.
That Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best all the year 'round blood purifier, and the only one you can always depend upon.
That to overcome that extreme tired feeling there is nothing equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla.
That it is a wonderful medicine for restoring and sharpening the appetite.
That it purifies, vitalizes and enriches the blood, and strengthens the whole system.
That for these and dangerous—now is the time to take Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"I can recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all as a safe, reliable and good medicine. For a terrible headache and cured my little girl of swellings in her neck which had been lanced twice." MRS. F. E. LORD, Gales ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Purifies the Blood
"When in the spring I felt all run down and much debilitated, I found Hood's Sarsaparilla just the medicine to build me up. My wife also, after much physical prostration, found in its use new life and lasting benefit. Upon our little girl, who had been sick with scarlet fever, its effect, was marvelous entirely removing the poison from her blood and restoring her to good health. Hood's Sarsaparilla deserves our highest praise and is worthy of the big things said of it by the public." R. STRATTON, Swampscott, Mass.

"I was troubled with salt rheum three years. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and am entirely cured, and my weight has increased from 168 pounds to 195." MRS. ALICE SMITH, Stamford, Conn.

WONDERS NEVER CEASE.
Prof. C. Donaldson, New Orleans, La., proprietor of Museums, who suffered eighteen years with rheumatic pains, states that he has spent two thousand dollars to get cured. After trying doctors, famous baths, electric appliances and kindred institutions without relief, he tried St. Jacobs Oil, which completely cured him. It is a wonderful remedy he says, and he has sold his crutches.

$500 NOT CALLED FOR.
It seems strange that it is necessary to persuade men that you can cure their diseases by offering a premium to the man who fails to receive benefit. And yet Dr. Sage undoubtedly cured hundreds of cases of obstinate catarrh with his "Catarrh Remedy," who would never have applied to him if it had not been for his offer of the above reward in an incurable case. Who is the next bidder for cure or cash?

"Love your enemy, but don't buy his boy a drum."

A WONDERFUL FREAK OF NATURE is sometimes exhibited in our public exhibitions. When we gaze upon some of the peculiar freaks dame nature occasionally indulges in, our minds revert back to the creation of man, "who is so fearfully and wonderfully made." The mysteries of life manifest themselves unraveled by Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, and through his knowledge of those mysteries he is able to prepare from nature's laboratory his "Golden Medical Discovery," which is a specific for all blood taints, poisons and humors, such as scrofula, pimples, blotches, eruptions, fever sores, swellings, tumors, ulcers and kindred affections.
