CONTRACT BRIDGE

By E. V. SHEPARD

FAMOUS BRIDGE TEACHER

WEST HAD WHAT HE ADVERTISED

EAST NEVER had heard of the new double-then-bid method of reaching the best final call, but West had what he advertised, and the bidding came out all right, as East did know enough to answer the informatory double. What might have happened had North's hand been held by East, also would have come out all right.

North: ♠ K 9 8 5 ♥ 9 5 ♦ J 9 7 ♣ Q 8 7 2

West: ♠ None ♥ K Q J 6 ♦ A K Q 2 ♣ A K J 6

East: ♠ 10 6 4 3 ♥ 10 7 4 2 ♦ 8 4 3 ♣ 10 9

South: ♠ A Q J 7 2 ♥ A 8 2 ♦ 10 6 5 ♣ 4 3

Bidding went: South, 1-Spade; West, doubled, as any other player would have done, whether or not he ever heard of doubling, then bidding. The funny thing about the whole performance was that West had expected to double, then bid, but he held an ideal doubling hand, without need of bidding afterwards, as his first response from partner must show the best final call, unless East happened to hold 4 diamonds and 4 clubs. When East responded with 2-Hearts, South bid 2-Spades, but North dared not overcall West's jump to 4-Hearts.

The opening lead was the 4 of clubs, which turned out to be as good as anything. Dummy's K won the trick. When the K of hearts was led, South won with the Ace, and led his last club, which dummy's Ace took.

The Q of hearts was led, hoping to drop South's last heart. East could not afford another round of trumps, so he led dummy's lowest club. When North played the 8, East ruffed with the 7, and South won the second and last trick for his side.

South led his Ace of spades. Dummy ruffed with the 6. North played his 8, as a come-on. The declarer led the 6 of clubs from dummy. North covered with the Q. The declarer ruffed with his last heart, but dummy held one trump, four good diamonds and a long club. A diamond lead put dummy in and five-odd were won.

It always is instructive to see what would have happened to an informatory double, or other bit of strategy, had two hands been exchanged. Suppose East had held the cards dealt North. West would have doubled the opening bid of 1-Spade. North would have passed. East would have bid 2-Clubs, which South would have overcalled with 2-Spades, and West would have jumped into 5-Club. No matter what opening lead South made, a small slam would have resulted. The only trick which the defenders could have taken would have been the Ace of hearts. Of course neither East nor West would have been justified in bidding higher than game.
