Hello, Everybody!

"Murder on Lewis Street"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter.

DAVE CAIDIN, of Bronx, N. Y., doesn't ever want to be a postal employee. Not if he has to deliver mail. Dave got into trouble once, and it was all over delivering a letter. And ever since then he hasn't even wanted to write one.

This story is a peculiar tale of letters and axes—and murder! It started with a letter from a friend in Europe. Dave's wife got it. In it was enclosed another one—a very important message for a woman who lived on Lewis street, on the lower East Side along the waterfront. The letter asked Dave's wife to deliver the enclosed message personally.

One November evening in 1923, just a couple of days after they received the letter from Europe, Dave and his wife journeyed downtown to deliver the enclosure. It's a long trip from the Bronx to the lower East Side of Manhattan.

It was pretty late when they got there. As they walked through the dark, dingy streets along the waterfront, Dave remarked to his wife that he didn't like the looks of the neighborhood—that he wouldn't be at all surprised if they were held up before they got out of it.

A Lonely Vigil in a Tough Neighborhood.

Well, sir, Dave didn't get held up. I can tell you that right now. But what did happen to him was a lot worse than any holdup.

They got to the house on Lewis street and rang the bell. There was no answer. The woman who lived there was out. Neither Dave nor his wife wanted to go back home without delivering their message. They had taken a long trip in from the Bronx and didn't want to have to do it all over again. They sat down on the steps in front of the house and waited for the woman to come home.

An hour passed, and the neighborhood was getting more deserted every minute. It was during the time of prohibition, and every day the papers were full of stories of gang warfare and murder. Dave told his wife he would wait until midnight, and not a minute longer. Then he sat back and marked time impatiently, waiting for the stroke of twelve.

They Witness a Brutal Beating.

There were only twenty minutes to go, but that twenty minutes dragged out like an hour. Two or three times Dave asked his wife what time it was, only to find that but a few minutes had passed. The street was all but deserted now, but from far down the street came the sound of men walking. The steps came nearer.

For the last time, Dave asked his wife to take a look at her watch. It was just twelve. Dave rose with a sigh of relief. "Let's go," he said.

He started descending the steps to the street level. Then, out of the gloom on the other side of a street lamp, a man appeared. Two others followed him. The first man was right in front of him as Dave reached the street. At the same time, the two men following closed in on the first. From their pockets they drew a pair of ugly blackjacks and began beating a tattoo on the first man's skull.

Two Men Were Beating Him With Ugly Blackjacks.

"What a skull that first man must have had," says Dave. "A horse would have been knocked out by one of those blows, but the big fellow stayed on his feet. Suddenly, he threw off his hat and coat, dropped them at my feet, and the fight moved out into the center of the street.

"At the first blows, I froze stiff with surprise. After that, things happened so quickly that the battle was well on before I got over my first bewilderment. But as the three men reached the middle of the street, I saw something that made my hair stand on end.

Dave Protested When It Came to Murder.

"One of the two attackers raised an arm and I saw the flash of a hatchet, raised with the sharp side down, ready to split the single man's head in two. Then I forgot where I was—forgot all about what was going on before me, and let out a blood-curdling yell at the top of my lungs:

"'Stop, you dirty murderer!'"

Dave's shout was so loud that it stopped the man's arm from descending. Dave made a dive to go to the beleaguered man's assistance, but his wife grabbed him about the waist with both arms and held him tight. She had kept her head a darned sight better than Dave had. It would have been plain suicide to go out there among those killers.

The Killers Were Gone When the Police Arrived.

By that time, windows were being thrown open and people were shouting and screaming for the police. But that didn't seem to bother the two killers. One yelled: "Finish the job—I'll get that other guy!" and he started for Dave.

Dave thought it was all up with him then. In fact, just one thing saved him. At that moment, the original victim broke away and ran, and both men turned and went after him.

The cops came then, and Dave turned over the intended victim's hat and coat which were still lying at his feet. "I told the police the whole story," he says, "and then I left with my wife, glad to get away from the scene of that horrible nightmare. I was shaking like a leaf for a week afterward. And I don't want to be a spectator at any more attempted murders."

WEEKLY BUSINESS SURVEY SHOWS GENERAL INCREASE

The prevalence of mid-summer weather and a better feeling over improved crop prospects gave retail trade a livlier tone than the previous week, resulting in a moderate rise in wholesale activity, particularly in implement and construction lines, according to national weekly reports issued by Department of Commerce. Gains over last year were heavier than over the previous week.

There was no evidence of recession in industry, and in many instances plants were being expanded. Marked improvement in employment was reported by many cities, while the rising tide in construction continued.

Mrs. Ackles Will Conduct Contract Bridge Tourneys

Mrs. Mary Lewis Fletcher, who has been conducting regular Monday night bridge tournaments at the Community House, has announced that Mrs. U. S. Ackles will henceforth serve as director of all tournaments, succeeding Mr. Everrett Judson, who recently resigned the position due to business reasons. Mrs. Ackles has been directing duplicate matches in Detroit the past Winter in addition to giving instruction in bridge.

Winners of the local city-wide elimination matches to determine the team-of-four that will challenge a picked quartet of Detroit bridge players will be announced this coming Monday night. Mrs. Fletcher stated that the prizes will be awarded to the four who achieved the best score. In addition, it was said, plans will be discussed for the inter-city series of duplicate matches.

DEER HUNTING LICENSES PASS 90,000 FIGURE

For the first time in the history of deer-hunting in Michigan, sales of licenses have passed the 90,000 figure. Returns from license agents compiled by the Department of Conservation May 1 showed payments on a total of 94,656 deer hunting licenses for 1936. Of this number 90,145 were resident hunting licenses.

During the fall of 1934 Michigan sold approximately 80,000 deer-hunting licenses, the salles last year representing an increase of approximately 15,000.

3000 PONTIAC EMPLOYEES ENROLL AS CRAFTSMEN

More than 3000 mechanics, shop foremen, service salesmen and service managers of Pontiac dealers throughout the United States have enrolled for membership to the select group of service men known as the Pontiac Service Craftsmen, according to L. K. Marshall, general service manager of the company. Pontiac Service Craftsmen are the service employes of dealers who take pride in executing every service job to the best of their individual abilities, says Marshall.

"I-Spunky Jones" by Marjorie Elaine Porter

Dear Mom and Dad:

I got your letters and I'm feeling swell. Gosh! Is this State big! a big place. Makes a guy feel sort of lost at first. Talk about being a little frog in a big puddle, sometimes I feel like a polywog in the ocean.

Mom wanted to know if I was getting gradually adjusted. There's nothing "gradual" about any of it. A guy's just dumped into the middle of everything and has to swim around and find his way out. Guess I make about 10 "adjustments" a minute.

Gee, there's a fellow has to do his own thinking. You folks always gave me a chance to think for myself, and make some of my own decisions, anyway. But at home, I know I had you to fall back on if things didn't go a little crosswy.

It's different, at the U. Boy! Out here you've got to show 'em you can take it if you pulse has sooner.

I like it though, betta on me, you know. Don't worry, Mom. I'm pretty good at being my own boss. I know my way around. Lots of things I want to go in for on the campus.

Red and I are back to being good pals. Red's grouped, so he doesn't want to mix in a campaign the time. He's got his heart set on going to town in football. I like to watch a game, but back I might as well tell you, Dad, that being the last man under a pile of spikes with ten guys standing on my neck, isn't my idea of making good at college.

And say, that make me think of some things you said in your letter. Now listen, Mom, I've got this straight. If I become a lawyer, I'm going to be a good lawyer, good attorney, and Grandma was one before him, so I'm in good shape. I'd be a knock-out as an attorney, myself.

Heck! After I get through law, I might decide to go into the clothing business. What I mean is, I can't guarantee you and Dad that I'm going to be a top notch attorney like Dad, so why should I try to be a lousy one, just to carry on a family tradition.

Honest, I don't know what I want to be yet. Feel some times as though I'd like to cut loose and go around the world on a clipper. You and Dad have always been good to me, too darn good.

After I graduate I want to knock around on my own where nobody knows anything about me, and I won't have to depend on family pull to land jobs. These guys who cut their wisdom-teeth on home-made cake, are just a great big drain in the neck to me.

Red's crabbing like the devil because I won't turn out the light and go to bed. As I said before, don't worry about me. I don't know what kind of work I want to do, but, please understand, folks, that when it comes to picking a job, I want to be the guy who does the picking.

Love from,
Your Son,
H. W. (Spunky) Jones.

MRS. W. M. ALE TO BE METHODIST SPEAKER

At the union services at the First Methodist Church Sunday evening, the speaker will be Mrs. W. Hugh M. Ale of Detroit. Mrs. Ale is the Membership Secretary of the Northeastern Branch of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Church, and is a fascinating speaker about young people. Her topic for Sunday evening will be "Youth and the Church."

FAVOR SHOOTING DOES IN OVER-STOCKED AREA

[illegible] conservationists in Michigan favor permitting hunting of deer in the state in areas where the State conservation department finds the areas are overstocked, it is reported by Professor P. A. Herbert, head of the forestry department at Michigan State College and secretary of the Michigan Forestry association. A canvass of the membership as undertaken following reports of dead and starving deer last winter, a condition that followed heavy snows and overbrowsing.

YOUTH, INC., FESTIVAL DANCE TO BE MAY 29

Heralding the advent of Spring, Youth, Inc., ill hold its second annual May-Queen Festival Dance on Friday evening, May 29, in the General Motors ballroom, Detroit. It was announced that over one thousand people are expected to be on hand to pay homage to the loveliest young lady within the organization, selected as queen from the girls of Detroit and nearby cities. Bill Boell and his orchestra has been engaged to furnish the music for the evening, it was said.

It was stated that each chapter of Youth, Inc. will select its own May queen and the judges will then choose from among those the queen who will preside at the festival.
