

ROYAL OAK RUMBLINGS.

EDITED AND CONDUCTED BY ARTHUR B. CAMPBELL.

Published every Monday at Birmingham, Alabama, for the Proprietor, Arthur B. Campbell.

What about the Fourth?

The Birmingham roller rink opens on Sunday night.

Mr. Mahon of Cleveland is visiting his mother-in-law, Mrs. Louisa.

Mrs. Court Allen is quite ill. She has been lying in a bed for some time.

No speaking at the M. E. church Sunday, the day being given up to the children.

Johnnie Campbell is on the road to health, and will soon be around again if he is careful.

Mr. Humphreys' illness is again quieted. She has been sick and confined much for a long time.

Well, how did you do in school?

You'll find it about next time. You won't be so sure as you think you are.

Never talking to the folks about you, for they will not know you.

The Detroit plot is a Royal Oak farmers have plotted to expel their countrymen from the territory.

The heavy crop will have a good effect on the price of flour.

The children put in a pretty good day at the M. E. church last Sunday.

Persian Paintings.

The palaces of Ispahan are decorated with large oil paintings by the most eminent Persian artists of their day.

All are life size, and none are devoid of artistic merit.

Some are very clever, representing the likeness of Futeh Ali Shah and his soldiers, several of whom were strikingly like their father.

As Futeh Ali Shah had an acknowledged father of 72, his latter fact is certain.

These paintings are without frames, having been made in the walls to receive them.

The Virgin Mary is frequently represented in these mural paintings, as Mr. Strachey, a young diplomat who accompanied the English mission to Persia in the reign of our Queen Elizabeth, is still admired as a type of adolescent beauty.

He is represented in the earliest costume of the period, and copies of his portrait are still often painted on the pen cases of amateurs.

These pen cases, or kalambans, are the principal occupation of the miniature painter.

As one-fourth of the male population of Persia can write, and as each man has one or more pen cases, the artist finds a constant market for his wares.

His pen cases are of various sizes, and are made of paper, wood, or metal.

Some are of great value, and are decorated with intricate designs.

Others are of a more common type, and are decorated with simple designs.

These pen cases are very popular, and are sold in great quantities.

They are sold in the bazaars of Persia, and are highly valued.

Where Snow and Rain Met.

"Well, I never saw the like!"

Such was the expression I heard while whirling along in an express train from New York Lake Erie and Western railroad, the other day.

I had been deeply immersed in a novel, and had not noticed that the weather had changed and that it was raining.

"Oh! that's nothing; we see it every spring and fall." The speaker was the brakeman, and his remark was addressed to the man who had never seen the like.

The latter had arisen from the seat in front of mine to get a drink of water, and had halted to gaze out of the opposite window.

The brakeman stood by his side, and continued: "That nothing is; this is the dividing line between rain and snow at this season."

Glancing from my window on the south side of the car I saw the pane marked with raindrops and a board fence running parallel to the track black with wet.

Then peeping out from a window on the north side I understood the stranger's surprise.

The ground on that side of the track was gray with snow, and the trees were still falling.

"The dividing line—how?" stammered the man addressed by the brakeman.

"Why, this is the point where the dividing line between rain-storms and snow-storms crosses this road," and the brakeman.

"Of course, I do not mean that every storm here is snow to the north of us and rain to the south, but just this season of the year a snow-storm will be visible within a quarter of a mile of this spot, not far from Allegheny."

"How do you explain that?" I asked.

"Explains that?" said the brakeman. "I don't pretend to know. I know our train has noticed it for years every spring, and it is not a new thing."

"I saw it in full in this neighborhood, a few weeks since, and it was a queer sight. Some folks are wiser than I say that the other air is formed as the sun warms it, while beyond the belt of country the snow-storm will be visible within a quarter of a mile of this spot, not far from Allegheny."
