Henderson Writes Of His Failure To Preserve Peace

By LINDO MOORE

According to tradition, diplomats are reticent, even secretive to an almost superhuman degree. When they get around to writing their memoirs and revelations, as most of them invariably do, they are careful to wait until nearly all the important persons concerned are dead. Which means that the world has lost interest in the "inside story" of something that happened 50 years ago.

Fortunately breaking with this hoary tradition, Sir Nevile Henderson lays bare for the first time in a personal narrative, Failure of a Mission, the dramatic details of the story of the coming of the Second World War. It is the story of his own attempt and his failure, to preserve the peace of Europe.

During his ambassadorship from 1937-1939, he came into frequent contact with the men who dominate Germany and some of his conclusions concerning Hitler, Goering, Hess, Himmler and others of the able and unscrupulous men who surround the Fuehrer, make vivid interesting reading.

The whole story is packed with drama for it all hinges on Britain's frantic efforts to keep the peace of Europe.

Nobel Prize Winners. The story of the men and women who won the famous prize for the greatest contributions to civilization. Of the 200 prizes awarded, nine were to women and four to institutions. It is also interesting to note that even Nazi Germany respected the ideal of the Awards. In 1936 a delegation of men from the Norwegian government paid a visit to Germany to honor the recipient-elect for the Peace Prize. The German government was enraged to learn that one of the prisoners in a concentration camp, a "traitor to the cause" had, because of the ideas for which he was imprisoned, won one of the highest awards the world can bestow. It is now forbidden for Germans to accept the Nobel Prize.

Dictionary of American History. Edited by James Truslow Adams. Famous and obscure men, women and events from American history go into this dictionary. Its alphabetical arrangement makes it convenient to use. To date only three volumes have been published; others will follow.

Rulers of the World, by Maurice Crain. Thumbnail sketches of the rulers of the present day world. The author in many cases attempts to explain the actions of some of the modern dictators by delving into their past life.

The Art of Living, by Andre Maurois. A calm, eminently reasonable book of philosophy and advice. Written in an easy, conversational style, the book contains chapters on the art of loving, marriage, family life, friendship, working, growing old and happiness.

Railroad Men Have 'Slanguage' of Own

Train and engine crews on the Grand Trunk Railways have a "slanguage" all their own as witnesses the following heard during a smoking car ride between Chicago and Battle Creek, Mich., with "deadhead" crews: "Battleship," freight engine or coal car; "clown wagon," caboose; "doghouse," cupola on caboose; "eagle eye," engineer; "goat," switching engine; "highball," go ahead signal; "tallowpot," fireman; "scissor bill," student brakeman; "car toad," car repairman; "brains," usually referring to conductor but applied indiscriminately.

Doctor 'Mystified' By Finding of Kit

Dr. Augustus W. Ives, 1088 Southfield, is "utterly mystified" by the discovery in Saginaw county of a small kit bearing his name in a wrecked automobile. The kit contained a hypodermic needle and morphine. Dr. Ives, who has not practiced since 1928, cannot remember ever losing the container he told The Eccentric.

Birmingham police were asked by the Saginaw sheriff to inquire about it.

Rufus Jones Home Damaged by Fire

An iron being used in a bedroom in the Rufus B. Jones home at 1200 Buckingham road Thursday afternoon at 4:26 resulted in a fire damaging the mattress on the bed. The iron dropped from the table to the bed, the resulting fire causing about $40 damage.

Domestic Employees Meet Monthly

The Domestic Employees association meets the fourth Thursday of each month at the Hotel Tuller, Park and Adams avenues, Detroit, at 8 o'clock according to an announcement this week by Bernard Breese, president of the organization.

The way warships are being bombed, torpedoed and destroyed, according to the officia l dispatches, indicates that the British and German navies have already been sunk two or three times.

Cutting Diamonds Affected by War

Wartime restrictions have been placed on industrial diamonds used in automobile boring and metal finishing operations, it is reported by the purchasing department of Pontiac Motor Division which buys nearly a pound of diamonds a year.

Yellow, white and gray industrial diamonds used by Pontiac are produced in quantity only in Britain's South African diamond fields. From there they are parcelled out to diamond brokers by a British diamond syndicate. Because of the war the stones now must be flown to the United States by Clipper plane, planes here now are licensed by the syndicate and their sales closely supervised to prevent the diamonds being rerouted into the hands of enemy industry.

American brokers laid up a large supply of industrial diamonds when war was declared last September and the price still remains constant. Brazilian diamonds have been considered as a substitute for the South African gems but they are more expensive and no great number is available. Depending upon the operation a diamond in industrial use may last from six months to three years. However, Pontiac reports, in certain grinding operations tungsten carbide—a super tough metal born of chemicals under terrific pressure—has proven a satisfactory substitute for diamonds. American machine companies also are producing a grinding wheel in which diamond dust has been embedded. This allows for the use of diamonds of the size technically known in the mines as 'bortz' and which are too small to be set individually.

Entertainment

DOG SHOW AT COX'S

A special attraction that should appeal to and entertain all dog lovers and arranged especially for the children has been arranged for Sunday afternoon performance at Cox's Cafe, Woodward and 11½ Mile road.

Le Roy and his Pals, eight dog wonders of various breeds, go through a remarkable routine of difficult tricks. A return engagement by popular demand, many adults saw the show and expressed a desire to have their children see it also. Le Roy works wonders with his groups of intelligent canines and tops off his performance by tossing one of his smallest dogs, a blind Boston terrier into the air, upside down and catching it on one hand; the blind dog being able to balance himself on his two front legs after a somersault into the air.
