Better Record

The mobile blood bank which came to Annie Lathrup school last week reported that Southfield Township contributed 135 pints, a much better record than the August visit here, and due, no doubt, to the cooperation given the project by the Women's Club and by those who solicited by telephone for donors. Mrs. George Burnham turned in 25 names. Many thanks to all.

Grade Separations Hit by Professor

ANN ARBOR—Separating the grades at all railroad-highway crossings will not eliminate accidents and probably would increase the traffic casualties, according to John S. Worley, professor of transportation engineering at the University of Michigan.

While grade separations prevent train-auto collisions, the toll from accidents caused by motorists crashing into the piers and abutments of viaducts is higher than the casualties caused by crossing mishaps, Professor Worley asserts.

Figures compiled by Professor Worley and Roger L. Morrison, professor of highway engineering and highway transport at the University, show that in 1935 there were 25 persons killed or injured by hitting the center-piers of 100 viaducts at grade separations in Detroit as compared to 37 killed or injured at the 282 grade crossings in the city, the casualty ratio at the grade crossings being about one-half the ratio at the viaducts.

The public outcry following accidents, such as the recent Detroit crash in which 16 were killed, frequently causes unwise expenditures for grade separations, Professor Worley says. Branding construction of grade separations for accident prevention as the most extravagant expenditure that can be made, he declares that such projects should be considered only when movement of traffic will be facilitated.

The big sum spent on one grade separation could be used more wisely to improve protection at a great many crossings, Professor Worley believes. He considers a good, alert watchman as one of the two best means of protection, the other being gates, either manually or electrically operated. Special cut-out devices, he said, can be installed to prevent electrically - controlled gates from blocking crossings while switch engines are operating nearby.

Tentative review of information on the young of largemouth bass, rock bass, pumpkinseeds and bluegills, accumulated and organized by the conservation department's institute for fisheries research, indicates that mortality among these species is so high that only 30 to 300 of each million fry produced any year ever reach the age of four years, at which time they are of legal size.
