

Spiritualism, a Serious
Charles Dawson, formerly a Wall Street broker, now a Spiritualist lecturer, has probably the largest following in the association, says "I am inclined to be skeptical. For eighteen months I sat alone on my bed, my feet on a stool, and my hands on a table, and under my wonderful experiences with power I saw things which I could not explain, but was not convinced. My arm would grow cold and move involuntarily. One day I sat in my study, my arm on the table, when a strange light came over me, and I wrote of myself. 'You are being abused.' It was so. Later I was in the lumber business. My brother wrote me from Quebec, 'Go to Montreal.' I went, and was there for a week. I was convinced that a charge of influence being made against me, I was ready to start to be branded again. It was a risk of $2,000 for a day's work, but I was not to be deterred. I was wrong. The lumber had been sold at one grade too high all around. The company was ruined, and the government officials who had been bribed by the mill owner, had to pay the expenses. Spiritualism is a science, not a religion, and I believe it has great possibilities.

Dawson's Religion
Spiritualism is a science, and many mediums and other persons create a sensation by attacking from the platform the frauds and inconsistencies of alleged Spiritualists.
