REMEMBER, BOYS MAKE MEN.

Things Worth Knowing.

Nickle trimmings can be kept bright by rubbing with a wool cloth saturated with spirits of ammonia.

Peach leaves pounded to a pulp and applied to a bruise or a wound from a rusty nail, or a simple cut, will give immediate relief.

A few drops of amonia in a cupful of warm rainwater, applied carefully with a sponge, will remove spots from paintings.

A very good cement to fasten on lamp tops is melted alum; use as soon as melted, and the lamp is ready for use as soon as the cement is cold.

A good imitation of ground glass may be obtained by boiling a teaspoonful of rice in a pint of water half an hour. The solution lightly dabbed on the glass with a brush will give the desired effect.

Canvas bags can, it is said, be made as impervious to moisture as leather by steeping in a decoction of one pound of oak bark with fourteen pounds of boiling water, this quantity being sufficient for eight yards of stuff. The cloth from which the bags are has to soak for twenty-four hours, when it is taken out, passed through running water, and hung up to dry.

An oak stain can be produced by mixing powdered ochre, venetian red and umber, in size and proportion to suit; or a richer stain may be made with raw sienna; burn sienna, and vandyke brown; a light yellow stain of raw sienna alone is very effective. To darken oak, strong coffee is sometimes used. To make it very dark, iron filings with a little sulphuric acid and water put on with a sponge and al owed to dry between each application is good.

Tracing paper may be made by immersing lens tissue paper in a mixture composed of turpentine and bleached beeswax. A piece of beeswax about an inch in diameter, dissolved in half a pint of turpentine, is said to give good results. The paper should dry two or three days before use.

Conclusive Argument.

A western correspondent sends the following:

I recently listened to a debate in one of the school lyceums of this city upon the novel and momentous question of "woman suffrage."

The debate upon the "anti-woman" side was doubtless engaged in his first effort, and this fact, together with a slight impediment of speech and a most original verieg of arguments, combined to produce one of the most est and most unanswerable speeches that I had ever heard. Here it is, almost in full.

"Ladies and gentleman, the first thing to find out is w-w-what man was m-made for, and what the w-woman was made for. God created Adam first, and put him in the garden of Eden. T-then he made Eve, and put her there too. If he hadn't co-created Eve, there never would have been all the sss-in there is now in this w-world. If He hadn't made Eve, she never would have p-picked the apple and eaten it. N-no-no, she never would have picked it and g-given it to Adam to eat. Put in his epistles says w-w-woman should k-k-keep still. And besides, ladies and gentlemen, ladies couldn't fill the offices. I d-d-defy any one to p-point out a woman in this city or c-country that could be sheriff. Would a-woman t-turn out in the dead of night to track and arrest a m-m-murderer? I say n-no! Ten to one she would elope with him!" And amid thunder of applause and laughter the able defender of man's rights triumphantly took his seat.—Harper's Magazine.

A Narrow Escape.

It is now quite a number of years since two hunters, Buck Standlingand Tom Surdie, were hunting with me in the western part of Texas, just south of the famous El Paso country. We had gone interior more for sport than anything else, caring very little whether we secured more game than answered for our immediate wants or not.

Penetrating still further and fu ther toward the Mexican dominion, we finally struck a barren, parched country, upon which we entered with caution.

"This looks as though we shan't find any water," I remarked, as we reined up our horses and took a survey of the arid plain.

"Does look rather skevry," replied Standling, taking his short black pipe from his mouth; "but I guess we'll find water. It make a sort of variety to this eternal tramping."

"But what shall we do without water?" I asked.

"Why, you see, there is water four or five miles back of us, so we can go ahead for a day, and if we can't find anything, why we turn round and make back tracks, and have another touch, but we won't hurt us. Myidea," continued the trapper, growing philosophical "is that we never know what water is till we've gone two or three days without it, just as the only way to get a good sound, refreshing sleep is to sit up a couple of nights."

So it was concluded that we would venture on the inhospitable Saharah, and, giving rein to our horses, we struck off on an easy gallop.

We saw nothing of buffalo nor deer, and not an antelope was discovered the prudence of the step, but as we were actuated somewhat by curiosity, head nothing as we pressed forward.

The Mexican plain is of the most which, no doubt, would last us all the time necessary. Now and then we would come to a dilapidated Salsaha
