

Abent-Minded People. Among the many eccentric and sometimes aggravating people of this world the absent-minded folks take a front seat. All people are more or less absent-minded, although some have the peculiarity to a greater degree than others.

All old people are absent-minded in one respect, if not in any others. That one respect is the ancient custom of pushing their spectacles up on their foreheads and then looking all around and keeping everybody else in the house upon a grand search for the articles, until the owner scratches his or her head in perplexity and the glasses slide down into place upon the nose.

Many old chestnuts are passed around about absent-minded people. Among them is that of the man who started down town from Broadway, and when half way to his destination suddenly remembered that he had left his watch at home. As he doubted very much whether or not he had time to go back after it, he pulled the watch from his pocket to ascertain.

Another olive, which when read will call forth a shout of "rats," is that of the guest of the American Hotel who started to the postoffice in search of a letter. When he had arrived at the corner of Sixteenth and Latimer street he met a friend with whom he stopped to chat. As he usual in such cases, the man who he met went around so that the man who was going to the postoffice stood during his chat facing North Denver. When his friend left him, the first man resumed his walk and he never had time to go back to the American house.

A few years ago the reporter who was assigned to look up the subject of absent-minded people was acquainted with a young physician of Detroit. The doctor often said that he was very absent-minded, and very frequently forgot himself walking out upon the street without his hat. After a short residence in Denver this young doctor, in a fit of absent-mindedness, committed a crime in which one of his patients was interested, and he is now a resident of Canon City penitentiary.

There are many absent-minded men who can never take a letter to the postoffice until they have carried it in their pockets for several days after their wives have put the letters in their husbands' hats so that they will be sure not to forget and forget it.

Many people are absent-minded about the payment of their bills. The small merchant who has a key in his hand key may be considered absent-minded, or he may be suspected of absent-mindedness.

It has been said that a young man once went home and put on his clothes and forgot to take the money out of his everyday pantaloons. In the evening he met the lady of his choice and invited her to take a lunch, which included ice cream. After the supper had been eaten, the young man discovered that he had left his money at home, and a scene of confusion ensued.

That was a case in which absent-mindedness brought about unpleasant results.

All mothers of growing children are proverbially absent-minded. They will let the little boy or girl wander for five minutes, "just as soon as I get through this ironing," or to-morrow, and they will forget all about it, and one of the neighbor women come in to complain, when the absent-minded mother declares that her child never did a wrong thing since he was born.

Electric Railways. An important feature of electric railways will be the use of their power for raising and lowering the cars by electricity. There is no need to dwell on the imperfections of the present system of lighting the cars by electricity.

It is not necessary to dwell on the imperfections of the present system of lighting the cars by electricity. There is no need to dwell on the imperfections of the present system of lighting the cars by electricity.

The possibility of heating cars by electricity has been discussed, but nothing has yet been accomplished toward making the cost anywhere nearly as cheap as coal. It is probable, however, that there will be a great advance in this direction.
