State Kenny Group Clear, Leader Says

Dr. John C. Montgomery, president of the Michigan chapter of Sister Elizabeth Kenny foundation, has issued the following statement in connection with the current investigation of the national Foundation's fund raising drives by Minnesota Attorney General Walter Mondale:

"While we are concerned and embarrassed by the alleged administration irregularities indicated in recent press reports, we wish the people of Michigan to clearly understand that the Michigan Sister Kenny Foundation is in no way involved.

"WE ARE a Michigan corporation, operated entirely by Michigan men, and supported by funds obtained through the Michigan United Fund and the United Foundation. All monies raised in Michigan have been spent in Michigan and at no time have any funds been channeled to Minnesota or any other state."

"Our budgets and records, always subject to close scrutiny and approval by the Budget and Admissions Committee of the Michigan United Fund and the budget and allocations committee of the United Foundation, are available for anyone who cares to inspect them."

Colby Promoted To Administrator

Stanley C. Colby has been promoted to the post of administrator of the Oakland county chapter of the National Foundation.

Colby, 35, of 4128 Lakewood, Drayton Plains, has been the chapter's field director since Oct., 1957.

The announcement was made by the Rev. G. Burton Hodgson, of Birmingham, chapter chairman.

Moore Advocates Expanding Program For Kids in Trouble

A crusading local member of the bench, Probate Judge Arthur E. Moore, presented a nation-wide program for juvenile courts to the National Council of Juvenile courts recently.

Moore, a leading advocate of the protective juvenile court system, said the program would work toward preventing juvenile delinquency by instituting a protective services organization in 40 communities across the nation, to aid the juvenile court system.

The judge estimated it would cost $1 million to extend his youth protection program nationally.

Moore, a Royal Oak resident, has been a probate judge for 24 years. He is the founder of Camp Oakland and author of the Youth Protection committee plan for local communities.

Supervisors Get Berkley Nix On Building Tax

Berkley councilman mounted a blistering attack last week against county supervisors' proposal for an additional four-year tax for building.

The tax, which would raise $4 million-plus in four years for a new county building, was also refused by Ferndale commissioners on a technicality.

County supervisors hope to swing Oakland county taxpayers behind the issue by winning the endorsement of city councils and township boards.

As of June 30 Birmingham had not considered the proposal. Bloomfield township and the City of Southfield, however, had given an O.K. to the plan.

Nominating Signatures Improper

Some 500 signatures on nominating petitions belonging to David Kaufman, candidate for Oakland County probate judge, were declared forgeries, names of unregistered voters, or both, by the county election commission last week.

The petitions were circulated by Leaun W. Harrelson, Frank A. Orsini, Alvy Bush and J. M. Bane, all Teamster Local 614 officials. Prosecutor George F. Taylor, exonerated Bush from any wrongdoing and Harrelson denied he had circulated the petitions.

Harrelson contended the faulty petitions were circulated by his son, Leaun, Jr., a business agent at Local 614. Mrs. Burnham Verway, an employee of the local and notary public, supported the elder Harrelson's story. She said that his son had brought the petitions to her to be notarized.

KAUFMAN, 29550 Everett, Southfield, will nevertheless be a candidate in the Aug. 2 primary.

Proabte Judge Arthur E. Moore, commission chairman, said Kaufman needed only 1,916 valid signatures but filed 2,835.

Kaufman told Daniel T. Murphy, Jr., Oakland County clerk-register of deeds and member of an election commissioner, that he did not know any of the Teamster leaders.

Furthermore, Kaufman said, he did not give them petitions to circulate and didn't know who did.

How to Preserve Roses for Winter

By ALICE WESSELS BURLINGAME

Special Writer for The Birmingham Eccentric

Roses at this time of year are at their peak of performance and from New Zealand comes this idea which will provide a new experiment for you and me. "If you want roses for indoor floral arrangements during the gray days of winter, go into your rose garden when the dew has dried and select those rosebuds which are just showing color. Cut them with a sharp knife, taking as long a stem as possible."

Melt some wax, it may be a candle, and dip the stems into the wax, about one and a half inches up from the tip. When the wax has set, wrap each bud in tissue paper and pack carefull in a box. Place in a dry, cool place.

When the rosebuds are wanted unwrap them, cut off the waxed ends and put them in tepid water. The buds will open gradually and be as fresh as when picked.

This same method may be used with lily-of-the-valley. The writer from New Zealand used the forced lily-of-the-valley in a bridal bouquet.

Mrs. Burlingame

IF YOU ARE having trouble with the results of your- plantings in your garden you may take a soil sample to our County Agent, 1260 West Boulevard, Pontiac, and by an analysis you can be guided as to the supplementary needs you may add.

When you take a sample of soil the sample should come from a depth not less than three inches and not more than six inches. You may place it in a jar and never let your hands touch any part of the soil in the jar. If any cigarette ash comes in contact with the sample the results will be void for the information you seek.

If you have a flowering crab, dogwood or wisteria which has disappointed you in its flowering, try this trick about six weeks after the normal flowering cycle. Take a razor blade or a very sharp knife and cut a thin band, not very deep, about 15 inches above the ground.

This ritual will occur when the flower buds for next year are forming. This wound will block the return down the trunk of food manufactured by the roots and will force this nourishment to be used "for the business of the moment" (forming flower buds). In the meantime the wound is healing.

GLORIOSA DAISIES are out at this time. They are annuals and you can secure the seed in an envelope easily at any garden store. The reward is great. You can plant the seed outdoors in the summer or early Fall for beautiful flowers the following June.

These daisies are the black eyed Susans who have come under the care of a scientist, Dr. A. F. Blakeslee who used to be with Smith College. They have been made tetraploids which gives them greater size and vigor. Glorisa Daisies will take the hottest weather and will tolerate our winter. With a minimum protection, these annuals can become perennials.

BY THE WAY, this is the time to begin your biennials for next year. You can consider pansies, foxglove, lupines, canterbury bells, English daisies, hollyhocks, sweet william, English wallflowers, Iceland poppies, etc. Don't forget delphiniums as being a flower which has to be started one year ahead of flowering from seed. The first flowers mentioned take more than one season to be brought into flower.

Select a sheltered spot near a shrub and incorporate lots of peat moss into the soil to avoid complete drying out during the dry spell in August. Scatter the seed and cover lightly with light soil. You may wish to place some twigs around the perimeter of the area to remind yourself to be very careful and not to carelessly cultivate the spot.
