BITS OF BIRMINGHAM

While discussing the pros and cons of a recent suggestion that might mean taxing Lathrup residents for use of library service in the city of Southfield, a Lathrup resident's comment caused loud laughter in the council hall Monday night. Dave Redwood, noting that people don't like to drive out of their home area to get books, was reminded that Lathrup pays for fire protection from Southfield. "That's right," quipped Redwood. "The only difference is their fire department comes here to give its service."

Birmingham city commissioners got a free ride Monday night. Before their meeting in city hall, they were taken for a spin in the City's new Civil Defense truck. They were shown the equipment in the truck and how it all operates.

Robert Kenning, Birmingham's assistant city manager, carried a couple of signs around with him Monday. He took them to the Rotary luncheon-meeting at noon and to the city commission's executive session following their regular meeting Monday night. And they provoked considerable comment. The signs read: "Minn., 13, MSU, 0," and "Minn., 23, Mich. 20." Kenning is a Minnesota University graduate, naturally.

When Beverly Hills councilmen got to voting on whether they would buy a Ford or a Dodge for the police department's use, two of the officials declined to cast a ballot. One is distribution manager for Dodge Truck Division. The other is production control manager at Ford's.

Lathrup City Administrator Jerald Stone proudly presented councilmen with some "visual evidence" Monday night—to prove the successful program waged by Lathrup police, volunteer officers and civic-minded teenagers against Halloween vandalism this year. Stone passed a tastefully plain cardboard carton around the council table, to the amusement of city fathers as they viewed its contents: assorted, slightly used bars of soap and wax. The "loot" was snagged from mischief-minded small-fry before they scored on local windows. The city's proud record: only one broken window, no other complaints for a minimum amount of holiday shenanigans.
