Mr. Chief Justice Walte is very fond of seeking mental relaxation from his juddeal work by reading at odd moments anything that may be selficially before to interest him. In society he is one of the most genial and single of men. His manner is cortial and dig mided, and he is a fond of a good story or the society of a brilliant and agreements of the property of the society of a brilliant and agreements of the property of the society of a brilliant and agreements of the property of the society of a brilliant and agreements of the property of the society of a brilliant and agreements of the property of the society of a brilliant and agreements. or the society of a brilliant and agreem-ble woman as any of his brother justices. There is always information to be gleaned from his conversation as well as a certain quiet humor. He is a 'immense favorite with the reigning belle-in society and finds in their youth, beauty and intellectual brightness much that is as refreshing as sunshine-after a day on the bench.
