Committees Forge Ahead For C of C

Excellent results are being obtained in the "Keep Birmingham Ahead" program, Henry F. Johnson, president of the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce reported yesterday. He said that 12 new members have joined and many present members have increased their support of the chamber.

Nearly 100 committeemen are calling on present and prospective members to obtain both their financial support and their personal participation in the expanded chamber program. The increased interest in an expanded chamber program and willingness to serve on committees has reached an all time high, according to Johnson.

THE NEED for active service on chamber projects and activities is being stressed by chairman, officers and leaders in the "Keep Birmingham Ahead" program. More committees will be named, more activities and services will be inaugurated and more frequent meetings of the members will be key points in the program, according to Johnson.

At the first report meeting, which was held 48 hours after the committeemen began their calls, it was announced that 32 present members had increased their annual support from $2,345 to $3,535 and that 11 new members had joined for $535.

THESE REPORTS covered only 10 per cent of the calls to be made, according to William E. Roberts, teams organization chairman.

The total of $4,080 reported is 18 per cent of the minimum goal of $22,500 which the chamber is seeking for its annual operating budget. According to Johnson, many believe that the chamber's annual income should be above $25,000 and that the potential is even higher.

Two report meetings will be held this week. Directors also will meet this week to continue the program and to start the new activities.

Interview Is Key To Job Hunting

The most important period in job-hunting takes place from the moment the applicant enters the interviewer's office until he leaves it.

"You create a definite impression which can win or lose the job, so you can not afford mistakes," says University of Michigan careers counselor Mary Dow.

One guide toward favorable impressions is dress, she says. Men should wear crisp, conservative suits with white shirt and tie. Shoes should be shined and socks conservative. Hair should be groomed neatly.

Women should wear tailored or semi-tailored suits or dresses. Perfume should be used moderately; lipstick and nail polish should be subtle.

Do We Use Too Many 'Tattered Phrases'

By RUTH VOGT
Special Writer

A writer recently accused us Moderns of using far too many meaningless sayings and far too many 'tattered phrases' in our speech when we encounter one another on a busy street corner, in the aisle of a store or when meeting someone for lunch.

In answer to the question to 'what do you know', we quickly, she said, reply that we know nothing much at all. Being asked what's been on our mind lately, we retort with the trite phrase, 'not a thing.'

And instead of revealing any of our personality when we are asked a query of where we've been keeping ourselves lately, we jump onto the limp saying that we have just been 'around' is all.

NONE OF these accusations can be denied. However, trying to figure out why so many of us, daily, fall back on such colorless, uninspiring remarks, a few explanations presented here might give the answer to why we aren't all Ready Wits in day to day contacts with our fellow-beings.

First of all, is a busy street corner, an aisle in a crowded store or a crammed lunch counter conducive to originality? How would it sound, after being asked 'what's new?' to launch into a long, detailed account of:

"WELL, we got the basement paneled at last. Mike didn't like the idea for four years; he wouldn't even listen to suggestions. It took four whole years of subtle nagging to get him sold on the job. When he got it done he was quite pleased with himself."

Wouldn't your hearer yawn right over the soup upon listening to that?

And in answer to 'how's the family', what if you actually pulled out descriptive adjectives such as 'cornery, tired, emotional when corrected, and, sometimes unreasonable when it's bedtime.' That's spirited talk alright. It's truth, too, but is it interest-holding? (Me think not).

To answer frankly to the question 'what's on your mind' might actually scare your companion to the extent that she'd never want to break bread with you during lunch hour ever again if you wondered outloud about world conditions and whether she thought we earthlings were going to be able to keep this globe steady beneath our feet.

YOU hesitate to ask for fear you'll sound too inquisitive. (Under such conditions, it's necessary to limit your conversation to quite 'light banal stuff.')

Before we insist too much of our daily talk is composed of tattered, tired phrases, let us weigh the fact that perhaps we are afraid of being accused of being too self-centered in our replies and we treasure, far too much, even passing exchanges of conversation than to run the risk of speaking out, frankly and honestly, to every question asked us. Originality? We've got it but we are cautious of where we use it!

Genevieve Casey Becomes 21st State Librarian

Genevieve M. Casey, former head of the extension division of the Detroit public library, took office Jan. 2 as Michigan's new state librarian, the 21st person to fill the post since the State Library was established in 1828. She replaces Mrs. Loleta D. Fyan who retired last April.

Miss Casey assumes leadership of the state agency which made major gains during 1961 in statewide public library development and its services to Michigan's 324 public libraries, schools, state government, legislators, colleges and universities and residents without local library service.

COMPLETING its 10th year in so-called "temporary" headquarters in 125 East Shiawassee Street, the library includes a public library development center at 220 North Grand, a documents section in the Cass building, a law library and information center, both in the Capitol and in a branch in Escanaba and a library for the blind in Saginaw.

Another service in 1961 was the Con-Con library. Working with state government and the Con Con Preparatory Commission, library officials assisted in setting up the special facility, stocked with some 5,000 volumes furnished by the state.

PRESENT State Library collections total 825,000 books, recordings, films, newspapers, pictures, maps, documents and recordings of which 125,000 are in the public library development collection, 70,000 in the law library and 35,000 in the Upper Peninsula branch in Escanaba.

Supervisors Oppose Tax By Detroit

Detroit's proposal to levy an income tax on suburban residents is being opposed by two committees of the Oakland County Board of Supervisors, according to an announcement made by the two groups Tuesday morning.

The Supervisors' ways and means and legislative committees' action bears the weight of the entire board of supervisors under the board's operating rules.

THE TWO committees have the power to act before the next full board meeting April 10. The committes have already instructed the county's six members of the State House of Representatives to amend an enabling bill currently before the legislature.

The bill would enable Detroit to tax residents outside of Wayne County. The amendment favored by the two supervisors' committees would prevent Wayne from taxing Oakland residents.

THE COMMITTEES have also asked the six state legislators to work with others opposing the bill.

The committees are opposed to the bill because residents would have no say on spending of funds for which they have paid taxes, a committee spokesman said.

BITS OF BIRMINGHAM

"Do you think the day will ever come when Michigan gets reapportionment and consequently has a legislature and a governor belonging to the same party?" this Oakland County Wanderer asked Governor John B. Swainson Friday night. Replied the handsome young leader, "Not as long as you people keep electing Republicans!"

Ever wonder what gives when kids come home with a long list of school needs? Consider, then, the quandary facing the parents of an eight-year-old in the Birmingham School System who brought home the following pencilled requirements for a science project: paper clips; a real needle; some broom straws; one penny; and human hair, soaped, rinsed and dried.

One of Nature's largest living things is a Douglas fir tree, found generally in western Oregon, Washington and northern California, yet it originates in a tiny seed just one-fifty-thousandths of a pound in weight.

Roofs with wide overhangs add beauty to a house and protect siding from weathering and windows from rain streaks.
