

BILTHEFUL DROVER'S HEIRSHIP

Chicago. Hove's Claims to a California Forty-Niner's Millions.

"Jim" Blythe is a sheep-drover. He was born and brought up in this city. He is now in the New York State penitentiary. In 1861 with the 9th New York militia, and in his early days ran for fire with the boys of Chicago. He is now in the New York State penitentiary. He is now in the New York State penitentiary.

There died, about four years ago, in San Francisco, an old man named Thomas H. Blythe. He had lived there since 1849, having come by way of Cape Horn from England on the ship Atlanta.

Instead of becoming a miner on his arrival he set up as a trader in groceries, dry-goods, and liquors, and he made money faster than the miners who patronized him. He invested in real estate which has since become very valuable.

Blythe was a very successful old man. Very shrewd and close in his business. No one knew anything of his antecedents, except that he was an Englishman. His only claim to fame was his presentation of hundreds of dollars worth of flowers yearly to a society.

He met his death by drowning while bathing, and a thorough search of his papers failed to discover any will. There were deeds, however, showing his ownership to large tracts of land, including blocks of houses in the city of San Francisco, 75,000 acres of valuable land in San Diego county, Cal., a nine-tenths interest in the lands of the Mexican Agricultural, Industrial and Colonizing company, situated in the valley of the Colorado river in Lower California, comprising 400,000 acres, in Lower California; a three-fourths interest in another ranch of 1,000,000 acres in Lower California.
