London is plunging headlong into railroad building. Seven new roads have recently projected from every part of the Pacific coast, and capitalists from the United States and from Europe are lending the government night and day for charters. In the past four years that country has become an unusually active field for the investment of capital in railroad building.

The Mexican congress has been more than indulgent to capitalists. They have not only given railroads large grants of land and financial support, but have guaranteed the companies a fixed per cent on the capital invested and have granted them valuable monopolies. The liberal policy on the part of the government is the cause of the impetus to railroad building.

Individually Mexico has great advantages and resources which need only the coming of railroads for their development. But from this distance it would seem that railroad construction is being outstripped by the speculative age, when new lines are pushed beyond legitimate demands for the sake of the subsidies and guarantees of the government. The boom in Mexico, just as it has been in our own country at various stages, has gone too far.

The people of England are greatly excited by the discovery that arsenic is present in the water supply of London. The London Lancet tells of a case of poisoning from this cause which occurred in the civil engineering college at Cooper's Hill. Some of the students had decorated their apartments with crocuses and in the course of great frolics had scattered the same time a singular epidemic of cholera prevalent in the establishment and attended with the ordinary symptoms of the alimentary tract and other symptoms characteristic of the action of an irritant poison suspended in the atmosphere.

The German aid society of Port Huron sent $100 to their brethren who suffered from the influenza epidemic. The members of the society of Port Huron, Mich., were engaged in the building of a "booby" house for the purpose of housing the influenza patients who had been sent to the hospital from the city of Port Huron.

Another Shooting Affray. A mile south of East Saginaw a shooting occurred on the 12th inst. between John Allen, a farmer, was fatally shot by a bullet fired from the rifle of a man named John Smith. The bullet entered his chest and passed through his lungs, fracturing the spine and severing the spinal cord.

Large deposits of tin ore have been discovered at Harney's Peak, near Rapid River in Southwestern Michigan. The ore beds have been reported to be of English quality, and this seems an unfortunate proceeding, for if these articles are interested in the tin ore of New South Wales, it is only to be regretted that Harney's Peak is in Michigan.

Some things die hard—some never die, but remain, in the language of Keats, "things of beauty, and joy forever." Of such it seems that the people of Michigan are made. The people of Michigan are made of such things that they can die hard.

Tracking along the Canada and St. Lawrence rivers, the Michigan and Ontario governments are engaged in a dispute over the boundary line. The dispute is over the location of the boundary line between the two provinces.
