BIG HANDS AT CARDS.

Some of the Curious Stories Brought Out by Old Players. Cards have peculiar freaks on many occasions, says the Philadelphia Record, and the story of the remarkable hands held at a table in the Hamilton club recently, when each player held a full suit, would seem incredible were it not for the well-known reputation and standing of the four gentlemen. The cards had been thoroughly shuffled, but thirteen diamonds were dealt to the dealer, and each of the other players held thirteen cards of one suit.

In connection with what a funny incident happened about a year ago to a well-known gentleman in this city who was a worshiper of Hoyle.

He was telling his friends that on one particular occasion he held the thirteen trumps and yet only took one trick. His opponent played the ace, and when he came to his turn he promptly trumped. His partner, disgruntled at play, threw his hand out of the window and ended the game.

Rolland Reed, the popular actor, is the hero of many wonderful poker games.

He is fond of telling how on one occasion on a railway train, with four hands he won against four gamblers at Boston, with Charley Reed, Fred Hawley and Allen Dale in the game. He was there in 1867, and a quiet life before the draw, and a quiet individual in the corner, who had slipped out of sheer desperation with a pair of deuces, eventually carried the wealth by drawing two more.

CHAPTER VIII.

It is given to very few people, other men or women, to feel the sense of perfect happiness during the first few weeks of a new life. Tessa had felt it. She had felt it in the little of the foliage and pleasure of youth that this new unlooked-for happiness came to her. She had felt it in the perfect bliss lasted; then the first clouds arose.

For more than a fortnight Tessa had been looking for Mrs. Bevan. She had already received one short note from him, in which, regarding the matter of the house, he had asked of her, then playing an obscure part in the life of the world, his description, might prove to be Antony Bevan's wife.

It was already nine o'clock, but Tessa was already waiting when Mrs. Bevan came. She was a tall, slender woman, with a pale face, and she looked anxiously at the door. She was a tall, slender woman, with a pale face, and she looked anxiously at the door.

Very few words passed between them that night. Mrs. Bevan looked at the door of the house, and unobserved took him upstairs, and left him at the door of the house, and unobserved took him upstairs, and left him at the door of the house.

What passed in that last solemn interview between mother and son was a matter of course, particularly for Mrs. Bevan. She was a tall, slender woman, with a pale face, and she looked anxiously at the door.

The evening went on, but Mrs. Bevan's mind was not at rest. She was a tall, slender woman, with a pale face, and she looked anxiously at the door. She was a tall, slender woman, with a pale face, and she looked anxiously at the door.

She opened the door gently. It is a matter of course, particularly for Mrs. Bevan. She was a tall, slender woman, with a pale face, and she looked anxiously at the door. She was a tall, slender woman, with a pale face, and she looked anxiously at the door.

That is Cleveland's card, Tessa. What is he writing to you about? "How can I tell? I haven't read it." "Are you not going to read it?" "By-and-by. Just at present the card of hanging is so pressing, Tessa answered carelessly.

Tessa smiled brightly into his face. She was a tall, slender woman, with a pale face, and she looked anxiously at the door. She was a tall, slender woman, with a pale face, and she looked anxiously at the door.

Tessa heard the dog-cart drive in the door, and felt sorry and amused. She was a tall, slender woman, with a pale face, and she looked anxiously at the door. She was a tall, slender woman, with a pale face, and she looked anxiously at the door.

She reached it just in time. She was a tall, slender woman, with a pale face, and she looked anxiously at the door. She was a tall, slender woman, with a pale face, and she looked anxiously at the door.

Tessa could not at first decide whether or to tell Mrs. Bevan the good news as she had just received. She was a tall, slender woman, with a pale face, and she looked anxiously at the door.

Tessa thought, but more than Mrs. Bevan in her head. She was a tall, slender woman, with a pale face, and she looked anxiously at the door. She was a tall, slender woman, with a pale face, and she looked anxiously at the door.

Now that the great object of the old had been attained there was nothing to be done but to live for quietude and happily she was content to let the unknown hours of the day pass.
