University's Loss

The Oldest Professor of the College, Dean of the Literary Department, Passes Away by an Affection of the Brain.

Death of Dr. Frieze, the Oldest Professor of the University.

ANN ARBOR, December 9.—Dr. Henry Frieze, dean of the literary department, and the oldest professor in the Michigan university, died at his home in Ann Arbor, Dec. 7. His death comes from the general breaking down of old age, hastened by an affection of the brain.

Dr. Henry Simmons Frieze was born in Boston, Mass., Sept. 15, 1811, and, preparing for college at Newport, R. I., Henry Frieze entered Brown university, supporting himself meanwhile by his skill as an Spanish, and graduated, at the age of 24, as valedictorian of his class.

His college course completed, he served as instructor in Brown university, and then grammar school in connection, for the following 13 years, early developing the good qualities which raised him to the first rank of American educators.

In 1855 Dr. Frieze was called to succeed Dr. Tappan as professor of the Latin language and literature of the university of Michigan. Shortly afterward, by his additional appointment to the chair of Latin, Dr. Frieze, in co-operation with his old-time friend, Prof. Heise of the university, set himself to the building of a course in the humanities, and the success of the university in that line, shows how eminently successful his efforts have been.

In 1858, Dr. Frieze visited extensively in Europe. Here he busied himself in the collection of engravings and plaster casts of antique statues which should form the nucleus of a cabinet in history and fine arts in the university. In 1860 the first edition of Frieze's Virgil was published, and in 1865 the first edition of his Cicero. Also in 1853 a revised text of the complete poems of Virgil, with annotations, and a Virgilian lexicon, followed in quick succession.

On the resignation of President Haven, in 1863, Frieze became acting president of the university, a position which he filled with great credit until 1871, when, at his own earnest solicitation, Dr. Angell was called to take the position. In 1880 President Angell being appointed minister plenipotentiary to China, Prof. Frieze was again called to preside over the faculty, an office he was equally fortunate with his former administration. The number of students in the university was at its then highest point, there being 1,594 in all departments, and the princely annual donation of $60 for the erection of a library building was obtained. The schools of political science and of mechanical engineering were founded, and the courses in music, both with and without the university, were introduced.

The Alibi Wont Work.

IRONWOOD, Dec. 9.—Assistant Cashier Phelps Perrin of the Hurley bank, who is accused of complicity in the recent robbery whereby the bank lost $40,000, has been bound over for trial. Perrin established a perfect alibi, but the prosecution insists that he gave the safe combination away, and that while Strathern and Crematano were before the robbery he was quite flush of money, but after the robbery he was on intimate terms with Saloonkeeper Baker, who is accused directly of the crime.

Topt Has Skipped.

GRAND RAPIDS, Dec. 9.—At first it was accepted that when Clarence Tapt, cashier of the United States express company of Grand Rapids, disappeared that he went off his head only, as an inexplicable mystery, having left all his other clothing in his room. He left no clue to show the start of the officers and the reward, and now it is learned that he bought a suit of clothes, pair of shoes, underwear, neckties—everything he needed for dress and bought several tickets to Europe, and it is safe to say he is half way there now.

Randall Wants Cash.

KALAMAZOO, Dec. 10.—Thomas H. Randall, who drove the street car last May that was wrecked and fired by strikers, filed by a Michigan Central engine crashing into it, has begun suit in the circuit court for $10,000 damages. He alleges that the ordinance regulating the speed of the engine is for the protection of persons from carelessness and permanent injuries inflicted on him as a result. The trial of Superintendent Hush and Engineer Wellan has been set for December 26.

A Good Showing.

MARQUETTE, Dec. 10.—Shipments of ore by water from the Lake Superior mines will be needed for the season of 1889. The season's work has been unprecedently large, the total to date being 9,594,594 tons in excess of the lake shipments of 1888. Shipments by rail for the year have been less than 300,000 tons, so the total output of the mines for 1889 will likely exceed 7,000,000 tons.

A Costly Verdict.

ST. JOSEPH, Dec. 8.—The G. A. Mathieu's suit against the Chariot furnace company for $100,000 for unauthorized use of a certain process invented by him, was tried in the circuit court the jury returning a verdict for the plaintiff for $30,000.

Point Chautauqua Sold.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y., December 9.—Point Chautauqua, one of the finest resorts on Chautauqua lake, was sold under the sheriff's sage sale. The mortgage amounted to $167,000. H. H. Newman of Buffalo and H. C. Fry of Rochester, owners of the Grand Hotel, its furniture and about 60 acres of ground, including cottages, bought for $47,000. The place will be improved and opened next year as usual.

Made a Good Haul.

WILMINGTON, Del., December 9.—While John C. Patterson was standing at the Delaware bank counter clipping coupons from some bonds, a sneak thief stole one of his Patterson's deposit box containing some $30,000 in securities and ran out and away. He is still at large.

Buckeye Free Traders.

CANTON, O., Dec. 7.—The Young Men's Democratic club last night celebrated the anniversary of President Cleveland's tariff reform message. Col. Brice made a speech, and the club adopted resolutions, a letter, approving the movement as tending to spread the proofs of tariff reform.

A Woman Figures Conspicuously in the Silcott Case—General News From the Capital.

Our Special Correspondence.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12.—The defalcation of Silcott, cashier of the house of representatives, is the all absorbing topic of conversation at present. For the moment the members of congress have forgotten that they were sent here in the interest of the people, inasmuch as Silcott's peculations effects their own pocket books, at least to the amount of their November salaries. Those members who had neglected to sign the vouchers for their November salaries are now congratulating themselves that for once, at any rate, procrastination has been money in their pockets. Investigation by the committee appointed by Silcott is not only guilty of diverting Uncle Sam's money to his own use, but that he has very successfully imitated, on a number of notes, the autographs of a number of congressmen and senators.

Silcott is at present enjoying himself in one of Montreal's best hotels, and assured that no harm will come to him, as private detectives are looking after him very assiduously—paid for by Silcott's friends—to come to demand that he be turned over to them.

The Michigan senators have decided to make the following appointments for certain supervisorships for the districts in this state; in the following order: Harry C. Tillman of Detroit; Charles H. Wisner of Flint; James N. McBride of Owosso, and Don C. Henderson of Allegan; James Watson of Georgetown; George A. Newett of Jamestown, and these are the men to whom the enumerators must resign.

Hon. John Wagoner of Kalamazoo county, the author of the Damon liquor law, has been given general charge of the eleven special agents engaged in collecting statistics of recorded indebtedness in the several congressional districts of Michigan.

A recent issue of the Star of this city contained sketches and portraits of the seventy members of congress. There are one hundred and eighteen new members of this congress, the Democratic Retiring Board of Grand Rapids, the Star says: "He has a big rough moustache and a wild eye; the boy fearlessness in him like a man. He is terribly in earnest. He is a jolly talker, a curious mixture of a scholar and a poller. He can make a good strong speech, and is inclined to take things easy." The same article on Congressman Stephens of Bay City, "is a genial, warm hearted man, and a prominent church supporter at home." Congressman Stephens is said to be "as rich as pine logs can make him, and as shrewd a man as you can show."

There's a "woman in the case," and the defaulting cashier has not only proven false to the trust reposed in him by Uncle Sam, but has broken the vows made to the fair one who he had promised to be faithful. The woman who has undoubtedly received a good deal of the money to which Silcott helped himself is Louise Thibault, a native of Quebec, and for some time an assistant in a notion store house in Montreal. She spent some weeks in Washington, where she met Silcott who became enamored of her, and proposed to elope with her to British Columbia with him. To this arrangement she consented, on condition that he would take her first to visit her parents in Quebec. Silcott was to meet her in Montreal where they would go to Vancouver and to British Columbia. This precious scheme of romance was marred by the accurate detectives whose interest in Silcott's movements is commensurate with the fat sum he is credited of having stolen.

Senator Allison of Iowa, gives it as his opinion that there will be some wise active and effective legislation on the tariff question during the present session. Senator Allison says also that the prospects for a reciprocity treaties with Mexico are quite favorable.

The speaker has appointed the following committees:

Ways and means—McKinley chairman, Burrows, Bayne, Dingley, McKenna, Payne, LaFollett, Gear, Carlisle, Mills, Mc-Millin, Breckinridge of Ark., Wheeler and Flower.

On appropriations—Cannon chairman, Butterworth, McComas, Henderson of Iowa, Peters, Cogswell, Belden, Morrow, Brewer of Michigan, Bowers of Cal., Sayers, Breckinridge of Kentucky and Sherman.

On manufactures—Kelley, Burrows, Fitch, Taylor of Ohio, Arnold, Morse, Sanford, Witter of West Virginia, Burnes, Williams of Illinois, Grimes and Fowler.

On elections—Boutelle, Houk, Cooper, Hanback, Grosvenor, Adkins, Buck, H. Bergen, Cumming, Comstock, Crisp, O'Ferrell, Outhwaite, Mahin, Kerr of Iowa and Wilkes of Illinois.

On rules—Lind, Townsend of Pennsylvania, Wallace of Massachusetts, Clunie and Pennington.

Idaho and Wyoming look with envious eyes upon the territories so recently admitted into the union, and very modestly suggest that they too would like to come into the Sisterhood of States. Bills with this object in view have been introduced into the senate.

A number of union soldiers were confined in Confederate prisons, during the war, beyond the limits of those who are listed. A bill has been introduced in the senate by Senator Hoar, to extend the pension list at $3 per day for every such day's imprisonment until the day of their discharge.

For Peace and Good Will.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10.—The following telegram has been received by Secretary Procter:

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 9.

To the Honorable Secretary of War, Washington: I have officially to inform you that Hon. Jefferson Davis, at one time secretary of war of the United States died in this city yesterday. His funeral will take place here on Dec. 11, at 12 o'clock noon.

JAMES A. SHAKESPEARE,
Mayor of New Orleans.

In reponse thereto, Secretary Procter sent the following message:

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10.

Hon. James A. Shakespeare, New Orleans—Your telegram informing me of the death of Jefferson Davis, late president, ing from my official action thereon, I would not, and hope I do not, add to the great sorrow of his family and many friends. It seems to me the right course and the best is for me to let that act, in its sure, understand that its application to the case of Mr. Davis, is made and can purpose to act in the spirit of peace and good will which should fill the hearts of all our people.

REDFIELD PROCTER,
Secretary of War.

Ashamed to Face His Accusers.

MILWAUKEE, Dec. 10.—Irregularities have been found in the accounts of Secretary Schotenburg of the school board and it is reported that a large sum has been embezzled.

Schotenburg shot himself dead this morning on the discovery of certain evidences in his accounts. He raised the bill for the $1,000 missing house from $8.34 to $608.34 and drew the money.

When the discovery was made he refunded the money. An investigation of his books was ordered, and he killed himself rather than face other crooked developments.

Schotenburg was a reckless poker player, and is believed that he has lost thousands of dollars of school money in bucking the tiger. He leaves a widow and several children.

A Careless Brakeman.

DUNCAN, Ky., December 9.—Two freight trains came together head on yesterday near Savage, a little station on the Chicago, St. Louis & New Orleans road. Conductor Berry of St. Paul, and Fireman John Phillips of Memphis, Tenn., were killed. Conductor Berry was literally ground to pieces. On car loads of freight in transit were scattered along the track. One freight had orders to wait at Durango for the other to pass. Three of the four sections into which the latter was divided went by in safety. The fourth was supposed to be some distance behind, but a waiting train was standing just beyond a curve. Brakeman Hamilton, in charge, failed to flag the approaching train, falled in his duty. An awful collision was the result.

INDIGNITIES TO AN EMPEROR.

Dom Pedro and Family Very Ungraciously Treated.

LISBON, Dec. 10.—It is learned that Dom Pedro and his family were refused a further residence at Petropolis, near Rio Janeiro, when the revolutionists occurred. Upon learning of what had happened, he hurried to Rio Janeiro and held a meeting of his ministers and councilors of state. It was then decided to form a new ministry with Senor Sarawa at the head, but to this Gen. da Fonseca objected, saying that a republic has been declared and was supported by the military; that the presence of the imperial family in Brazil was incompatible with the existing state of affairs and that they must leave the country. No communications were made to pass between Dom Pedro and the foreign representatives.

At 2 o'clock the following morning Ma, Commodel, with a detachment of soldiers, went to the palace and placed the members of the imperial family under arrest where they were still in bed.

He bore written orders from Gen. da Fonseca that the emperor and his family should embark forthwith. The government would not allow them to wait until daylight, as they had asked, in consideration in the streets in favor of Dom Pedro might result in bloodshed. This measure was considered doubly necessary, as the students in the city were well supplied with arms, and were greatly excited.

Count d'Eu and his wife, Princess Isabel, and their children were permitted to leave the palace at 3 o clock Sunday morning and walk to the quay. Dom Pedro and his empress followed in a coach under escort of a body of troops. The imperial party were driven on to a steam launch which were taken to a man of war, which immediately proceeded to Ilha Grande, an island 15 miles from Rio Janeiro, where the party was kept as prisoners until the afternoon, when they were transferred to the Alagoas.

The ex emperor says: The palace at Rio was surrounded by troops and considerable agress was stopped. "The siege lasted for 36 hours, during which time the family suffered from want of food. The empress' wrists were hurt as she was being hauled on board the Alagoas. Dom Pedro says: "I was deeply affected when the news first reached me from Europe. I felt by a carrier pigeon, bearing my fare well message to Brazil.

ITS ENGLISH, YOU KNOW

A Company Formed With $100,000,000 Capital.

NEW YORK, Dec. 9.—The Times says: English capital to the extent of $100,000,000 is about to be invested in this country in a vast scheme and project that will throw far into the back ground in the matter of comparative importance every financial scheme of the day. "European Jealousies" that has been exploited.

This project is intended to embrace a variety of purposes. One of the chief objects will provide credit for new American railroad projects. It will be worked financially known as a "financiering" company, acting upon principles and methods long recognized in the English financial world. It will be an assurance company; its "risks will be...first mortgages. It will be a guarantee company; it will underwrite new enterprises submitted to it for indorsement. Indeed, agents, accountants and engineers are already engaged in making preliminary investigations. Satisfied that such an enterprise is substantial, the company will under write it—will pledge its own capital that it will be a safe investment. It will assume control of a new railway enterprise just as a conservative life insurance company assumes relations to a man seeking insurance. If found sound and in all essential respects satisfactory, the risk will be assumed and a guarantee made in addition upon the company's bonds. Companies operating upon this principle abroad have been successful.

A FOOLISH MAIDEN.

She Engages Herself to a Man She Never Saw.

FINDLAY, O., Dec. 10.—A romance in real life has come to a sudden termination in this city. About two years ago Miss Lottie E. Parish of Cuba, Republic county, Kan., noticed an advertisement by James Hardy of Chariton, Ia., and began a correspondence. She answered it, and the pair have been writing to each other ever since. A short time ago Nettie received a letter from her lover asking her to meet him at Findlay, where they would be married and go to her western home. Both the girl's parents were dead, and she was alone. They soon saw each other for the first time after paying her expenses here from her western home. Nettie is a girl. This her lover borrowed and celebrated the occasion by getting on a high old drunk, during disorderly, they were both arrested, and locked up in the police headquarters. James is charged with carrying concealed weapons, and will probably get a term in the penitentiary. Nettie, who is nineteen, wants to be sent home.

What Justice is Doing.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—The attorney general's annual report just made public shows that during the year 1,000 cases were terminated, while about 9,000 are still pending. Gen. Miller recommends the establishment of a United States penitentiary in Utah and a United States court of appeals for the milder classes of criminals.

The report says that shortly after his induction into office the attorney general's attention was called to the violations of the laws relating to congressional elections by intimidation, fraudulent ballots, bribery and other means. The matter was very thoroughly looked into and a large number of indictments have resulted. The attorney general refers to outrages committed on witnesses called to testify in these cases, but adds that hostilities to the United States courts is not confined to the election cases, and asserts his purpose to suppress lawlessness of all sorts so far as he is concerned.

The report recommends some changes in the judicial system. Such will enable the courts—especially the supreme court—to expedite business.

Remembered Jeff Davis.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—In his prayer this morning the chaplain of the house said:

Almighty God, the land is full of sorrow. Rachel weeping for her children and will not be comforted, because they are not. fathers for their first born, the nation in stay of their future years; children for their parents, and millions in cold in the atmosphere of death, mourning the departure from earth of a man dear to their hearts, who has lived a long and honored score of years. Grant that the solemn lessons of the occasion may be a heritage to all the meaning of which all may, before long, may soften and hallow our hearts and lead feelings into the noble grandeur of the golden text uttered by the most consolatory messenger that ever came to redress of heart made greatness of station and character most illustrious: "Charity for all, malice to none."

Cracked His Skull.

ZANZIBAR, Dec. 9.—Henry M. Stanley, Emin Pasha, Capt. Cassati and their party arrived here on Tuesday last. Wissmann and there was great rejoicing and a thanksgiving service. Wissmann provided horses and a grand triumphal entry was made into Bagamoyo on Wednesday morning. The German gunboats fired salutes and the town was decorated. An address of welcome was held at which toasts were drunk and speeches made by Stanley and other members of the expedition.

During the festivities Emin Pasha, who is near sighted, walked off a balcony and fell 20 feet, fracturing his skull. It is thought to be fatally injured by the physicians, although Stanley's friends believe that he will pull through. Stanley reached Zanzibar to-day.

Farmers and Knights Unite.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Dec. 9.—Powderly, Wright and Beaumont, representing the Knights of Labor, met the committee of the farmers' and laborers, union, and a basis of federation between the farmers and the knights was agreed upon. The executive officers of the two organizations will form a central council to meet from time to time upon all matters of joint interest.

The various farmers' bodies have agreed upon a plan of consolidation, which will, it is believed, be taken into effect as soon as necessary references can be made to the various state organizations, result in bringing about an absolute union in one body.

A Terrible Charge.

MINNEAPOLIS, Dec. 7.—The coroner's verdict in the case of the Tribune building fire declares that the owners of the building are morally if not legally responsible for the loss of life, and that the building is not been for the obstructions made by the tenants, the fire escapes would have been put in place in time to save all the people in the sixth and seventh stories of the building and the 1-72 recommends that steps be taken to bury all electric wires as soon as possible.

Three Children Burned to Death.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Dec. 8.—At Franklin, Ky., to-day, three little children of Kay Dempsey, colored, were burned to death. They had been left alone in their home.

THE BORROWING FAMILY.

It's pleasant to be neighborly
Because it seems so sunny
And cheering to the heart
Who live on what they borrow.

That you are proud to be their friend
They have no room to doubt of;
They also think you glad to lend
The things you're always out of.

Their sympathies come with cups and pails
For groceries forgotten:
The daughter borrows shawls and veils
And admiration, plus and minus.

The mother borrows books to read
And kettles, pots and dishes
And things she needs but rarely need
Regardless of your wishes.

We like this happy family,
They make our pleasures double
For while they borrow all they see
They never borrow trouble.

LOVES EBB AND FLOW.

Clyde Harris stood looking down on the lovely face of the girl before him, his dark eyes burning.

It was a fair, delicately-cut, perfectly-tinted face, with great violet eyes looking innocently up from its beauty, and a mass of silken, sunny hair piled high above its low white brow, and for months he had followed it.

There she stood, cold and fair, with even pulses and untroubled heart—she who had taught him to love her unavailingly—she who had but a moment before held to him that she would never be anything to him—that he had been a fool—a fool of a brainless, moneyed youth, who had dangled in her train for some time.

With a long, unconscious sigh. On the still Autumn air the words stole out to Clyde, and made his lip curl bitterly.

"Man's love is like the restless wave,
Ever at rise and fall;
To-day a woman craves—
To-morrow—all!
It must be all or none;
Ask me no more if I regret—
You have taken your choice, a woman's heart can ne er forget:
But me get me gone."

"The only love a woman craves!" Ah, but the fairest woman he had ever seen was throwing a man's true love at his feet, and he had put it away in its place the glitter of diamonds and the sheen of costly raiment!

"Did you not love me?" he said for the last time, then?" he asked at last.

And the violet eyes lifted to his reproachfully.

"You know you better than anybody else," she said sweetly. "Indeed I am very sorry you are poor, Clyde."

He laid his hand upon his heart he turned away, as her betrothed came out and claimed her. And so they parted—they who had played at love like children, and broken it.

Inez Lake went in to the light and music of her hostess' parlors; Clyde in the hall, and down the area steps and through the moonlit night to his home, the refrain of the song he had heard following him like a mocking voice:

"You do not love me—no!
Did me good by, and go;
A woman's love is soon forget;
Did me good by, and go.

"A man's heart shall!" he vowed, going to his room at home, and crossing the pretty hall to the parlor. "I will forget Inez Lake—or remember her only as the cruel, cold, fair, false, cold, mercenary."

"It was yet early. His mother and her protege—the girl she had taken to her heart during the years before—had not gone to their rooms.

His mother lifted a warning hand as he entered the room.

"Elaine has fallen asleep," she said softly. "We will not wake her yet, poor child! How lovely she is, Clyde, and how changed from the little girl you used to play with!"

Elaine Gonzales lay back in a large chair, sleeping. Her olive face rested on her dark curls, which had fallen lay, black as night against her cheek. Her face looked like a freshly opened magnolia blossom as the stood looking down at her, and Clyde's heart leaped as it contrasted, in its dark yet delicate beauty, with that blonde face of Inez Lake.

Suddenly the girl's black eyes unclosed. She smiled up at him—a smile that dashed sunlight over her whole face.

"I was dreaming," she said merrily —"a pleasant dream, Clyde; for you were in it, Cousin Ned, and you! But you are quite pale. What is it?"

She sprung from the chair and laid her hand on his arm. He took it in his own and answered low:

"I have been dreaming, too," he said, trying to smile, "and my dream was much like yours—only the danger that threatened me I had to meet alone —"

"Clyde," his mother interrupted, while the girl drew nearer him, and looked wistfully into his face—"Clyde, there is a letter on the table at your desk, which came while you were out. I don't know why, but it has made me uneasy. Read it, my son."

He dropped Elaine's hand, and took up the letter, but he would have read the inclosure, vaguely, dimly he felt that, had it come but six hours before, the contents of that would have been changed by it—the girl he wooed would not have said him nay so sweetly in the moonlight.

"Mother," he said, lifting his eyes from the sheet—burning, bitter eyes they were—"this letter tells me that I am sole heir to my father's wealth. My head swims as I read of my possessions —all beyond the Atlantic—left me by a man who never saw my face, who never knew that I existed, who hoarded all his days, to leave lands, houses, gold, for a stranger to squander. For we are stranger to it, mother. We will do no hoarding."

"Clyde, my son, you are not ro-making?"

"No? I tell you what the lawyers write me. Henceforth I may purchase what I will, of comfort, courtesy, kindness—even love, if I choose, Elaine!" he turned to her, the bitter light strong in his eyes—"you shall have luxury, love, wealth, the best of your bounty. I will dower you so well that you will not have to ask, when a man brings his love to you, whether or not he can give it to you. Elaine, I—"

"Hush!" cried the girl, facing him in burning indignation, her eyes flashing, her head thrown back. "My friend, my brother, hush! I do not merit such words from you, for you know my past, and you know how very happy I am here. Clyde, Clyde, how you think I can be so glad at thought of jewels or fine raiment—"

The girl broke down, shocked her; and turning from him, she hurried to the door.

"Clyde, Clyde, how could you?" his mother cried, impulsively. "Are you blind that you do not know? Elaine has loved you since she was a child."

"I know it," he had been so; but with what a shock had sight come to him. Well, all shocks are beneficial to the man whose love dream has been mocked him; and hearts, when they ache most sorely, may be nearest the rebound.

Clyde crossed the ocean, found all as represented, sent for his mother and Elaine, and remained for three years in England. Then, wishing for a sight of his native land, found him self on board for America.

The first person Inez Lake at all, as he stood alone on deck, the first sight after they had lost sight of land, it was with a half smile. And yet, when he took off his eyes from the water and saw her coming toward him, with the olden grace in her every movement, the olden smile on her red lips, his face lost color, and for an instant it seemed to him as though within his heart the love he had deemed lifeless stirred.

"It is pleasant to meet friends, Clyde," she said, extending a soft, jewled hand. "We are both returning to America after absence."

"I did not know you had left it," he said, coldly.

"Oh, yes, when I married Mr. Vane I coaxed him to take me abroad, and he did so. We traveled for a year, and then—you know he died in Naples eleven months ago?"

Clyde looked down upon her with eyes as cold and hard as steel.

She had married Royal Vane; he had idolized her, and she told of his death, in a foreign land, as even of voice, as calm of face, as though she spoke of the fading of a flower.

And such cold creatures could break the hearts and mar the lives of men!

Nay, it was memory, not love, that had stirred in his breast. His love—his tender, precious love—was sitting beside his mother, surrounded by men —as she had been wherever her dark face had been seen, since she went with him across the sea—and he knew that no beat of her heart, no smile of her lips, was for any of them; she was his, loving him true, as in the old days she had been, when she had passed her for the siren at his side.

"I did not know," he said at last.

"I thought you did not," she answered, softly, "for you sent me no word. I have heard of you, Clyde, and I know that you are still free. I, also, am free to-night. We are no longer children.

If love was not utterly dead for her in his heart, would it not have the dart of death, as he looked upon her, when he came to him with the wealth of the unmourned dead in her hands, with which he knew he would gild its thorn-pierced forehead.

"They told you I was still free?" she said slowly, his whole manly soft revolting at the task before him—"they did not tell you truly, then, for I am bound, by a love so strong and tender that all pain or shame is blank to nothing beside it. When my hands were empty, I was richer than I knew —rich in life's best riches. When fortune came to me, I beg of you to realize that it was not the love my wealth could purchase that I wanted, but the love that I gave her in mine were a beggar in the streets. 'Tis mine to-night. Mrs. Vane, and yonder is the girl who has my whole heart in her keeping. Let me present you to her."

She bent her fair head and turned at his side in silence.

Elaine saw no regret in her breast, it was not for the dead husband whom she had left under the grasses of Naples. And the dainty face was paler than usual, it only proved that even the most selfish heart there is a spot which can be touched and made to quiver with the agony of pain.

He led her to Elaine and introduced the two. And when Inez met the sunny, loving eyes of Elaine's dark eyes, she did not wonder that her own spell had fallen from Clyde's heart beneath their splendor.

"She is lovelier than I," she told herself, bitterly.

And it did not dawn upon her that it was nothing nobler, worthier, less transient than that beauty which had won Clyde Harris.
