

CHAPTER X

The twilight had deepened rapidly during the last half hour, and it was now as nearly dark as it ever would be...

Then she entered the drawing-room. To her mind she had never before forgotten her grief for a time, and was discussing on the misdeeds of the man who had so cruelly wronged her...

Now, if ever, was the time, she thought. Trembling at her own boldness, she went into the garden and motioned to Antonio, who had ventured up the laurel-walk and was standing in the half light behind some thick bushes to approach...

"Why should I listen? To be fooled again?" he said, in his cold, bitter voice. "No, not the first time. You are a fortune teller, and you have told me that tonight you were with him in the laurel walk at an hour when he could not have been there..."

"You have been very good to me, Miss (and he said it with a good deal of wonder) if you were really my little sister, and his voice grew deeper, his manner more impressive, and his words—'I should take you in my arms and bless and thank you for all your goodness...'"

"Good-bye," she said gently, and Antonio started and looked at her. She turned away, and he followed her. She was in the dining-room when she heard the door open, and she saw her mother's face...

"Yes, perhaps that would be best. As you say, I had better go to my new lover," she said slowly, and she turned and walked steadily across the room to the door. She looked back once as she turned, and she saw her mother's face...

"By-and-by you will remember, Antonio, that you would not listen to her. She was a girl, and she was young, and she was beautiful, and she was the daughter of a nobleman..."

"Your presence here is an insult to me and mine!" he said, in a clear, cold voice, and she felt a sense of contempt and wrath. Antonio had always been a quiet, unobtrusive man, but now he was different...

"You must be remarkably dense!" he said, and she felt a sense of contempt and wrath. Antonio had always been a quiet, unobtrusive man, but now he was different. He was looking at her with a cold, hard gaze...

"I will tell you then, as you will, I am not a man who is easily deceived. You know me well enough, there is no need to assume that look of virtuous indignation. This is not a man who is easily deceived in your lover's—witness you, I thought you were that, Antonio, 'Tess' failed."

DR. LAMAR IN JOPPA.

The Emigrant Brooklyn Pioneer Talks on the Question of the Mole. He arrives at the Bishopric of Sewing Machine in the Course of His Pilgrimage to the Holy Land. A graphic description of his journey.

Rev. T. De V. Talmane reached ancient Joppa in time to preach to an assemblage of about a hundred persons. His subject was: "The Birthplace of Sewing Machines." He spoke of the history of the sewing machine and its impact on the world.

A strange feeling of unrelieved gloom and numbness was stealing over Tess, and she felt as if she were in a dream. She looked up at the man who was speaking, and she saw a face that she had never seen before...
