The State Board of Agriculture Refuses to Have Over Six Acres at the World's Fair Commission.

Evidence in the Centerville Murder Mystery—Dr. G. H. & M. H. R. Steamer Badly Burned.

State Board of Agriculture.

The state board of agriculture at its last session decided that Prof. Beal could not be spared from his duties as zone superintendent of the Michigan fruit exhibit and commissioner, and will be obliged to make another selection. The action of the board will be much regretted as Prof. Beal is exceptionally qualified for the position. President Franklin Wells and Henry Chamberlain were made two committee to meet with the commission at its meeting at Grand Rapids in January.

The board agreed upon holding farmers' institutes in the following places on dates to be announced later: Dowagiac, Kalkaska, Grattan, Ionia, Wayland, Howard City, Harbor Springs, Corey, Sturgis, Sherwood, Church's Corners, Centerville, Utica, Branch, Smyrna, Adrian, Jasper and Clio. Places for holding three additional institutes remain to be selected. Two thousand five hundred dollars was voted for books to be added to the general library; $100 to purchase plants for the botanic garden and $500 for additions and improvements to the herbarium.

Low Test Oil Dangerous.

President Hazzhurst and 35 members of the Michigan state oil inspectors' association listened to a lecture upon kerosene oil tests by Dr. R. C. Kedzie at the agricultural college on the 5th. Dr. Kedzie demonstrated that the closed cup test is the only true one, and that the Tagliabue open cup can be use is not adequate. With the closed cup oil purchased from dealers at Okemos flashed at 100 and burned at 110 degrees, while the open cup it flashed at 110 degrees and burned at 120. He showed that the test provided for by the present law of 110 is a relic of the old test and that use of the new test oil is positively dangerous. The lecture was given at the invitation of the inspectors, who provided a stenographer, and will have it printed and circulated at their expense.

Important Circumstantial Evidence.

A dispatch from Centerville states that Frank Miller, arrested in New York city on knowing something of the murder of Edward Jones, whose body was found in a creek a few days ago, has confessed his guilt. He is reported as saying that his own brother and a man named Gillette committed the crime, the latter striking the fatal blow. It is known that Gillette asked his sweetheart, whom he visited on the day previous, to disappear, as he swore that he was with her the night before at 9 o'clock, and that he exhibited money to her that he did not account for. A reward is offered for Gillette and the other Pullen boy.

Later he returned to his native state to learn from a South Carolina court that the validity of his second marriage was not recognized in South Carolina, and that his children by that marriage could not, at least in that state, inherit his property. In the laws in all the states founded upon the personalistic attitude of South Carolina on divorces, marriages would be regarded as a more serious contract than men and women now regard it. Courtship would be longer drawn out and marriage, therefore, not as sudden as an electric shock.

THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Indiana has a Very Strong Claim to the Location of the Fair.

A special from Indianapolis says it is expected there will be a wild howl from Chicago when she learns that Indiana may ask for and will receive the $1 per capita side off the eastern portion of Illinois to justify a claim that will be made on the part of the Hoosier legislature. The claim will be held valid it will include the great $25,000,000 stock yards as well as the present site of the world's fair. The present basis of the claim results from a claim filed against Indiana for a 13-mile strip of land in the southern boundary. Later a Indiana western boundary line was originally fixed by measurement from the eastern boundary, and as a result 3,000 acres of land in Indiana which Ohio's claim is correct, Indiana's boundary would take in that part of Illinois in which the Windy City is located.

In Memory of Executed Anarchists.

Two thousand people participated in the demonstration which was held on Sunday in the 8th in honor of Parsons, Spies, Engel, Fisher and Lingg, the anarchists who suffered death for their crimes. Chairs was a street parade, with red flags furled and draped in mourning, followed by speech making at Waldheim cemetery over the graves of the dead anarchists. Addresses were made by Henry Weisman, editor of the Bakers' Journal; Morris Schultze, editor of the Arbeiter Zeitung, and A. C. Miller, and they were all of the most revolutionary character. The dead men were extolled as martyrs to the labor movement and their graves were covered with flowers. Eighteen societies were represented, every one of which bore a red flag in the parade. One of these was a socialist club of Evanston, the legend in German: "Though dead, they still live." Over the grave of Mrs. Lucy Parsons' house was decorated with crape. Early in the day a red flag floated over the roof, but the police went to the house and took down the flag before it had been long in position.

They Got What They Wanted.

Passengers on the Missouri Pacific train which left Omaha at 10:30 on the night of the 4th were startled at 1:30 a. m. by shouts of "hold up" at West Side, a suburb, at 11 o'clock. Four masked men took charge of the train when it stopped at the suburb, one covering the engineer and firemen with a rifle while the others, with drawn revolvers, ordered a stop-sign displayed. They entered the coaches and ordered the passengers to throw their hands up. Next they attacked the express car, threatening to blow open the door with dynamite the messenger was induced to admit the robbers by the use of chloroform. The railroad officials refuse to give any information as to the amount of booty secured, but it is said that the Adams Express Co., City and St. Louis banks were secured. The robbers were armed but on foot.

Horsewhipped Healy.

Mr. McDermott, nephew of the late Charles Stewart Parnell, publicly horsewhipped Timothy Healy, M. P., the most bitter of the Irish leaders opposed to Miss Parnell, on Tuesday. The horsewhipping received by Mr. Healy was the indirect outcome of the disclosures made in the Parnell case, and the anti-Parnell leader referred to Miss Parnell and to the widow of the late Parnell in terms which led to the present assault in the most brutal and cowardly manner. The details of the assault are as follows: Mr. McDermott caught Mr. Healy in the Four Courts building, Dublin, and in the Four Court in Dublin and then in the presence of a number of persons he thrashed Mr. Healy unmercifully with a horsewhip until the latter was rescued by the police. Mr. Healy, when his assailant had been secured, made a statement to the police and charge against him and so Mr. McDermott was released and went his way surrounded by a number of sympathizers.

GOSPEL ARCHIPELAGO.

DR. TALMAGE PREACHES ON RHODES AND PATMOS.

A Night View of the Island Visited by Paul—The Birthplace of the Gospel of John—Other Glimpses of Early Days.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Nov. 6, 1891.—An overflowing congregation at the Brooklyn Tabernacle this morning attested the interest the religious public is taking in the series of sermons which the pastor is preaching on what he saw, commentary of the Scriptures, during his tour from the Pyrenees to the Acropolis. This morning's sermon, the fourth of the series, was on the islands of the Greek archipelago. The doctor took two texts: Acts 21:3, "When we had discovered Cyprus we left it on our left hand," and Revelation 1:9, "I, John, . . . was in the isle that is called Patmos."

Gloomy Egypt! Although interesting and instructive beyond any country in the world, excepting the Holy Land, Egypt is to me somewhat depressing. It was a post-mortem examination of great cities that died 4,000 years ago. The mummies are wrapped up in the cloth of the dead, were prepared with reference to the Resurrection day, the Egyptians departing this life wanting their bodies to be put back in a good condition as possible so that they would be presentable when they were called up with the rest of the dead.

This sermon finds us on the steamer Minerva in the Grecian archipelago, the islands of the new Testament, the islands Paulinian and Johannian in their reminiscence. What Bradshaw's directory is to travelers in Europe, and what the railroad guide is to travelers in America, the book of the Acts in the Bible is to every visitor to Grecian, or as I shall call it, the Gospel archipelago. The bible geography of that region is the chiefest to point out a shadow of mistake. We are sailing thy mornlor on the same waters as Paul so long ago. The opposite direction to that which Paul voyaged. He was sailing southward and we northward. Paul sailed by Ephesus, Cos, Rhodes, Cyprus. With us it is reversed and it is: Cyprus, Rhodes, Cos, Epesus. There is no book in the world so accurate as the divine Book. My text says that Paul left Cyprus on the left; we, going in the opposite direction, left it on the right. On our ship Minerva were only two or three passengers beside our party, so that I had liberty to walk the deck and on, what a night was Christmas night of 1890 in that direction! The moon was full and so light above, islands of beauty beneath! It is a royal family of islands. The Grecian archipelago is the crown of the world's scenery set with sapphire and emerald and topaz and chrysoprasus and jasper. With a Bible in my hand I seems let down out of celestial landscapes. God evidently made up his mind that this part of the world should illustrate the utmost that can be done with islands for the beautification of earthly scenery.

The steamer had stopped during the night and in the morning the ship was still at anchor. Now we were ordered up to the deck and found that we had anchored off the island of Cyprus. In boat, which had been towed astern, rising up as is the custom, instead of sitting down as when we row, we were soon landed on the streets where Paul and Barnabas walked as long ago preached. Yea, when at Antioch Paul and Barnabas got into a fight—as ministers sometimes did in those times of old—they all have imperfections enough to anchor them to this world till their work is done—Cyprus was the island that bitter controversy Paul and Barnabas parted. Barnabas came back here to Cyprus, where he died in this place. Island wonderful for history! It has been the prize sometimes won by Persians, by Greeks, by Romans, by Saracens, by the Crusaders, and last of all, not by sword but by pen, and that was put up for the keenest delegation in the century, Lord Beaconsfield, who, under a lease which was as good as a possession, got Cyprus among the jewels of Victoria's crown. The word out into the excavations from which 30 consular ships carried our American museums with antiquities and we have better weapon than our foot we stirred up the ground deep enough to get a new bottle in which to preserve tears of pilgrim on his way. That island of Cyprus has enough to set an antiquarian wild. The most of the ruins tell the glory of the past, and the typhoid fevers that sweep its coast and the floods that submerge its fields, and its skies, though 8,000,000 were expended by the British empire in one year for the keenest engineering, and noxious insects, yet failing to do the work) and the frequent change of government of mankind, [illegible] perity. But when the islands of the sea come to God, Cyprus will come with them. Then will the ancient commercial opulence which adorned it in ages past will be eclipsed by the spiritual and commercial and religious triumphs of the Prince of Christ. Why is the world so stupid that it thinks the nations are prospered in temporal things in proportion as they are prospered in religious things? Not so. Real religion triumphant, all other interests triumphant. Not so much that religion low down, all other interests low down. So I thought as on the evening of that day we stepped from the filthy streets of Larnaca, Cyprus, on to the boat that took us back to the steamer Minerva, which had already begun to pave the waves like a courser impatient to be gone. Then we moved on and up among the islands of this Gospel Archipelago.

Night came down on land and sea and the voyage became to me more and more suggestive and solemn. If you are pacing it alone, a ship's deck in the evening is one of the most solemn places. Then the imagination may conjure up almost any shape he will and it is also a time when the conscience may be by the smokestack, or meet him under the captain's bridge. But here was the ship's deck in the evening, the pet Archipelago and do you wonder that the sea was populous with the past and that down the ruined hills the memories descended? Our friends had all gone to their berths. "Captain," said I, "how long will we arrive at the island of Rhodes?" Looking at me from under his glazed cap, he responded in sepulchral voice: "About midnight." Though it would be long before the possible hours, I concluded to stay on deck, for I must see Rhodes, one of the islands most famous in the world for the greatest missionary the world ever saw or ever will see. Paul landed there and that is enough to make it famous while the world stands and famous in heaven when the world has passed away in smoke.

This island has had a wonderful history. With 6,000 knights of St. John, at one time stood out against 200,000 warriors under "Soliyman the Magnificent." The city had 3,000 statues, and a statue to Apollo called Colossus, which has always since been considered one of the seven wonders of the world. It was three years in building and was seventy cubits high, and had winding stairs to the top. It stood 1,000 years and then was prostrated by an earthquake. After lying in ruins for 900 years, it was proposed to be constructed for other purposes, and the metal, weighing 720,000 pounds, was put on 900 camels and 30,000 pounds would be taken off. It got so ashore, but the lights all went down the hills show where the city stands, and we come out to take freight and to bring three passengers.

But there is one island that I long to see more than any other in the world, to miss the prizes among the islands, but I must see the king of the archipelago. The one I longed to see is not many miles in air distance between Cyprus or Crete or Paros or Naxos or Scio or Mityiene, but I had rather, in this sail through the Gospel archipelago, see that than all the others; for more of the glories of heaven unfolded there than on all the islands and continents since the world stood. As we come toward it I feel my pulses quicken. "John, John, John, I see that is called Patmos." It a pile of rocks twenty-eight miles in circumference. A few grapevines and inferior olives pamp a living out of the earth and one palm tree spreads its branches. The barrenness of the island and loneliness of the island made it a prison for the banished ministry. Domitian could not stand the ministry of John and Milton found quiet, that and blindness; Beethoven banished into deafness; haute writing his "Divina Commedia" during his banishment from his native land; Victor Hugo writing his "Les Miserables" while banished home and country on the island of Guernsey and the brightest visions of the future have been given to those whose only audience was sorrow and we were exiled from the outer world into rooms of suffering. Only those who have been imprisoned by very hard surroundings can have had great revelations made to them. So Patmos, wild, chill and bleak and terrible was the best island to all the archipelago, the best place in all the earth for divine revelations.

There are all the lights that we may better see it. The panorama passes, and lo the conquering chariot, robed, purpled, arrives. The shadows of candlesticks and seven stars in his right hand, candlesticks and stars meaning light held up, and the light is centered. And there passes a throne and Christ on it, and the seals broken, and the woes sounded, and a throne and a rainbow and seven last plagues swoop, and seven vials are poured out, and the Babylon falls. And we have an instrument to rest from the exciting spectacle. Again the panorama moves before the eyes of Patmos, and lo, on the exile sees a great city representing all abominations, Babylon towered, palaced, templed, fountained, hanging gardened, sculptured, living gardens, suddenly going crash, crash and the pipers cease to pipe, and the lights cease to burn, and smoke and the dust and the smoke and the horror fill the canvas, while from above and below and all the volcanoes ring "Babylon is fallen, is fallen." And we halt again to rest from the spectacle. Again the panorama passes before the cavern of Patmos and John the exile sees a mounted Christ on a snowwhite charger, and the armies of heaven following him, the long line of white chargers galloping through the scene, the clattering of their hoofs, the clashing of bridle-bits, and the flash of spears, all the earth conquered and all heaven hallelujahed. And we halt again to rest from the spectacle. Again the panorama passes before the cavern of Patmos, and John the exile sees a city of gold, and a river more beautiful than the Rhine or the Hudson rolls through it, and fruit trees bend their burdens on either side and all is surrounded by a wall which the upholstery of autumnal forests, and the sunrises and sunsets of all the ages, and the glory of burning worlds seem to be commingled. And the inhabitants never treat e a sigh, or a groan, or disease, or a tear, or a frown a dislike, or weep a tear. The fashion they wear is pure white, and their temples are crowned with garlands, and they who were sick are well, and they who were old are young, and they who were dead are reunited And as the last figure of that panorama rolled out of sight, I felt that this must take me back into this cavern, nerveless and exhausted. Too much was it for naked eye to look at. Too much was it for human strength to experience.

My friends, I would not wonder if you should have a very similar vision in your bed. You will go through this world, its care and fatigues, and struggles, and if you have served the Lord Jesus Christ, done the best you could, I should not wonder if your dying bed were a Patmos. There has been so. I was reading of a dying boy who, while the family stood around sorrowfully expect ng each breath would be the last, cried, "Open the gates, open the gates! Happy! Happy! Happy!" John Owen in his last hour said to his attendant, "Oh, brother Payne! the long wished for day has come at last!" Rutherford, in the closing moment of his life cried out, "I shall be with Christ! I shall see him as he is!" In the fair company with him, and shall have my share. I have gotten the victory." Christ is holding forth in his arms to embrace me. Now I feel it. Now I enjoy! Now I rejoice! I feed on manna. I have angels for guards. My eyes will see my redeemer. Glory, glory dwelleth in the Immanuel's land." Yes, 10,000 times in the history of the world has the dying bed been made a Patmos. You see the time when you will, or when you will of God, be exiled to your last sickness as much as John was exiled to Patmos, and you will be in your own room not to come out again for God is going to do something better and grander and more glorious for you than he has ever yet done! There will be such visions down to your pillow as God gives no mortal eye to see except to return to the same world. The apparent loneliness and restlessness at the time of the Christian's departure, the physicians say, is caused by the pain of distress. It is an unconscious and involuntary movement, and I think in many cases it is the vision of heaven and gladness too great for mortal enounce. It is only never been breaking in on the dying spirit. O, we shall work will be done and the time for your departure will be at hand, and there will be wings over you and a chariot under you, and songs let loose on the air, and your old father and mother come for you, and descend into the room, and your little children whom you put away for the last sleep years ago will be at your side, and there will be on your foreheads, and you will see gardens in full bloom, and the rustling of sighing palms, and you will hear voices long ago hushed. In many a Christian departure that you have known and I have known there was in the phraseology of the departing ones something that indicated the near presence of those whom death ceased. It is no delirium, no delusion, but a sup mal fact. Your glorified kindred will come down, and they will be in the room, and you will hear their voices around you may near no voice, and see no arrival from the heavenly world, you will see and hear. Then you will

A TERRIBLE EXPLOSION.

Gas in a Pennsylvania Mine Explodes with an Awful Power; Twelve Beaths the Result.

Third Annual Report of Secretary Holcomb of the Labor Department, a Good Showing.

Asiatic Black Tongues, a Most Fatal and Infectious Disease, Makes Its Appearance in Indiana.

Terrible Mine Explosion.

A terrible explosion of gas occurred in No. 1 shaft of the Susquehanna coal company, at Nanticoke, Pa., on the 5th, by which twelve men and boys were killed and others terribly injured. But a short time elapsed before the news spread through the town, and in large crowd gathered at the scene, including relatives and friends of the miners, and while they waited for news from the fire shaft the excitement rose to the extreme. It was soon learned that owning to the fact that the main way to the miners were but fourteen men at work in the mine. A searching party was organized as soon as possible and the brave men went down the shaft to rescue their fellow workmen. They had struggled before with the dangerous afterdamp, and after a short search found seven in the cavern, groping in the dark, came upon the body of the victims. Some were beheaded and others terribly disembowled. It was a fearful spectacle. The remains were taken to the mouth of the shaft, and from there to their late homes in ambulances and on stretchers. After each one followed the weeping wife and children. Of the 14 men in the mine s x were killed instantly, six died from the effects of the other seven will survive. The explosion was caused by the attempts of one of the men to change the air current, when his lamp exploded.

Secretary Husk's Report.

The falling off in tobacco being $11,000,000, barley $2,500,000, eggs $1,125,000, horses $1,500,000. The removal of the duty on hides, has caused an increase of importation. The value of home products, and he wants the duty replaced on hides coming from countries that have not removed cuts on products to the United States. On the subject of meat inspection the United States government has instituted a thorough system that has removed all cause of complaint by foreign critics. Not a case of pleuro-pneumonia among American cattle exported to Europe has been discovered within a year. The appointment of Prof. Harrington, of Michigan, as chief of the weather bureau, is highly commended by the secretary.

A Dread and Fatal Disease.

Information has been received to the effect that a dreadful disease has made its appearance near Kirklin, Ind. A few days ago, one of the children of the family of John Wyman was attacked with a peculiar disease that baffled all medical skill, and in forty-eight hours the child was dead. Then another of the children out of a family of four contracted the disease and died. When the mother, Mrs. Wyman, died the father and husband became a raving maniac. The description of the disease is almost too dreadful to realize, and the first symptom is the purple and fiery red strawberries, 3 acres of land, have always been a specialty with me. Stock is grown in fact everything complete. Must be sent to be appreciated. She first turns very dark in color, decomposition sets in, and in the paroxysms of the most intense suffering she bites her tongue off and dies. The disease is known to them only as it is described in medical books, and that its home is in Asia, where among the natives it is as fatal as cholera. Physicians are much alarmed, and confess their utter inability to combat its deadly work. Later news from the infected district say seven more cases are reported beginning with the same symptoms.
