

A SPRING SONG.
I picked the violet of May,
The first of the flowers to bloom,
And laid the summer rose "delay,"
Sweet, then and now,
I'll wait till May,
The whole of spring is one day,
I'll wait till May.

We heard the bird's voice to-day,
Deep down from the sky,
Nor knew it sang the Spring away!
What, then and now,
We said "the violet still stay,
The whole of spring is one day,"
I'll wait till May.

The roses bloomed and went away;
We saw the Summer die,
The leaves were with the bloom of May,
Sweet, then and now,
I'll wait till May, still we say,
"Immortal spring is one day,"
I'll wait till May.

WORKING FOR HIS BOARD.
Country life has charms for those who are not compelled to live it. A certain romantic young man who had spent all his life in the city, either going to school or touring about Europe, decided that he would like to see the country. He was a student at a certain college and had been given a position as a boarder at a certain place in the country. HE HARNED THE CLOTHES.
Because it had become the proverbial trial of the season.
"A woman living up in Harlem was telling the other day how she had harned her clothes. She had a very nice wardrobe and she was very particular about her clothes. She had a very nice wardrobe and she was very particular about her clothes.
