

Who is determined to make for himself a name in the world, or to raise himself to a respectable position in life, and gain the esteem of his neighbors must go to work with his whole heart.

From young men people do to their work, they are generally over-zealous, and who are virtuous from the love of virtue, from the obligation which he thinks he lies under to the giver of all, there are ten thousand who are good only from their apprehension of punishment.

"A fair breeze won't fan a fire," or conquered difficulties, or achieved glory, but insistent assumption is more contemptible than the lack of it. Success is determined by ceaseless, energetic, not impudent, stick up for your own rights with all your soul and with all your strength, but never leaving a hair's breadth on the rights of others.

As freely as the firmament embraces the world, so mercy must embrace friend and foe. The sun pours forth impartially his beams through all the regions of infinity; heaven and earth are equally over his great plan. Whatever is good and comes from on high is universal and without reserve; but in the heart's recesses darkness dwells.

Any good man who loses his temper in the wrong place is bound to be blamed and sorry afterwards, and will suffer for his fault, as he should. But after all, he will hardly hate himself as long as the man with a temper to lose who has it, nor will he regret that he ought to have lost it. The first man has remorse, which is bad, but the latter one has despair.

Who who leaves at the end of a common school course with a love for reading good books is better prepared for the duties of honor and respectability than one who has passed through a high school without any love, and who has an ordinary school education with the taste for good books, and a love for reading good books.

It is but fair to regard many of our pleasures but as matters of opinion, and in doing so we shall gain, for we shall be concerned with what we equally conceded that many of our pains are but of the same airy birth, and have little real foundation. We are not pain gainers by the former concession; for although our pleasures and pains may be more matters of fancy, they will bite us or tickle us, just as sharply as if they were real.

Not all can afford even among those who must travel over a railroad route, to pay in advance for their tickets for more than two or three months, or for even 20 days, and there should be arrangements for the mechanic who must go every day, but who is not purchasing tickets, and whose means are more limited than those of the railroad corporation, or for the man who desires to go once or twice a week, to obtain his ride without paying in advance for his tickets.
