CLOVER IN RELATION TO FERTILITY OF THE SOIL.

To Prevent Winter Killings—Keeping Alive—Renewing—Notes and Home Hints.

Notes on Manure Fertility.

A reader of your paper asked me to devote one paper to the question of clover in the relation to fertility of the soil. I will try to do so to the best of my ability. I have no doubt that clover is the most valuable of any of our native plants for the purpose of enriching the soil. It is a root crop and its roots, by their action on the soil, break up the soil and take up the lime and phosphorus, and these elements are made available to the soil. It is a nitrogen-fixing plant and its leaves, when they die, are rich in nitrogen. It is a valuable plant for the soil and for the stock.
