Isora's Bridal Vow.

BY MARGARET BROWN. CHAPTER II. "You did keep your promise about the mail, my good friend, and you did not forget to bring me a substitute for it," he said, with a sneering smile.

CHAPTER III.

"I forgot, but I will remember another day," he said, with a sneering smile. "I must see that man, Sir Laurence, at once. Has he the ball?"

HAD A STORY.

"It was like one of those Connecticut tales," he said, with a sneering smile. "A young man who had sat in the shadow of his father's pillars and observed long with a sigh, and a sigh that was not a sigh, took to him and then came back."
