AN UNEXPLORED ISLAND.

Its Queer Population of Indians, Probably of Mexican Origin.

James Millar, who has long resided on Prince of Wales island, and who, by reason of his being the first white settler there and now occupying the largest interest, is referred to as the monarch of that island, is in San Francisco. Mr. Millar is located at Hunter's wharf, where he has been for four years engaged in the business of canning and salting salmon, says the San Francisco Chronicle.

The island of Prince of Wales, on which Mr. Millar has elected to make his home, lies at the mouth of Dixon's entrance, and only about three miles from the northern boundary of British Columbia. The island is about 200 miles long and from ten to thirty or forty wide. It is singular in its make-up, having a fringe of lowland all around. Toward the center are ridges of mountains, some of them reaching lofty heights and covered with perpetual snow. There is magnificent timber in great quantities. It consists of spruce, fir, hemlock, splendid yellow cedar and a very superior red cedar.

"The Island has never been surveyed nor explored," said Mr. Millar, "and, some day it must prove, I think, a most inviting field for exploration. The Indians, of whom there are probably some 3,000, are scattered around the island shores in little villages, usually of about 100 inhabitants each. They consist of many different tribes. Most of these I came in contact with are Haidas. There are between 300 and 400 of them at Hunter's bay, and they are quite industrious as fishermen and salters of the salmon. The Hydah Indians came up from the Queen Charlotte islands many years ago and settled on
