THE CREEK MYSTERY.

WHO STRANGLED HAPLESS CLARA SHANKS?

Vigilance Committee in Parke and Fountain Counties, Indiana, Trying to Locate the Guilty Party—Story of the Crime.

(Bloomingdale (Ind.) correspondence.)

THE MURDER OF Clara Shanks, which has been exciting Parke and Fountain counties for several weeks, is still shrouded in as great mystery as on the morning the lifeless body was taken from Wolf creek falls. Three of the shrewdest criminal attorneys of the two counties, two detectives of more than local reputation, all assisted by a vigilance committee comprising a dozen of the best farmers of the neighborhood, have worked day and night on the case trying to find sufficient evidence for a conviction of the guilty parties, but the plot seems to be a fit subject for the pen of a novelist.

Clara Shanks was the beautiful 18-year-old daughter of Frederick Shanks. She was the third child of six, and was in many ways the star of that rural home. The Shanks place is one mile north of Grange Corner, and just over the county line in Fountain county. Just across the road, in Parke county, is the home of Daniel Keller. During the recent drought the Shanks family has been carrying water from the Keller place, and it usually fell to Clara Shanks to do this. These frequent trips to the Kellers led to a suspicion on the part of Mrs. Keller that a flirtation had sprung up between Clara and her husband. Her jealous nature became excited, and her opinion was soon magnified to such an extent that she believed there had been improper relations between her husband and Clara. The latter's two youngest brothers had an idea that the sister liked Dan Keller, and whenever they would see him out in his barnyard they would taunt their sister with such remarks as "Clara, there goes your feller."

Daniel Shanks, the oldest brother, heard of Mrs. Keller's allegations, and on the evening of July 5 he went over to their place to investigate. Mrs. Keller told him of her suspicions and that Clara must not be allowed to come for water. Other members of the family child come, but she must not come into the yard. Next morning about 11 o'clock Mrs. Keller, her sister, Miss Emma Cox, and her husband, Daniel, went out to the rail fence at the road separating the two houses to make up the difficulty. They called for Clara to come to the door, but her brother Dan would not let her go. Mrs. Shanks responded, and there in the open dooryard the charges were told the mother, who declared that she did not believe them. To this Mrs. Keller turned to her husband with the: "Will you let them deny what I say?"

This scene ended, the Shanks family weft back into the house. At 12 o'clock the family sat down to dinner, and there for the first time the father, Frederick, was told of the allegations made by Mrs. Keller. Mrs. Shanks turning to her daughter said, "Clara, What about this?"

The daughter denied all the charges, and then a profound silence settled over that dinner table. Clara could not eat and in a few minutes got up and left the table, that being the last time the family saw her alive. She left the House, but no one thought to notice her.

By 12 o'clock the mother became uneasy and sent the children out to look for the girl. Dahiel Keller was in his barnyard at the time, and seeing the children searching the premises he shouted to them:

"If you are looking for Clara, I saw her going down the lane more than an hour ago."

The Shanks family hunted the Wolf creek thicket for their daughter that afternoon, but notwithstanding that

DANIEL KELLER.

Mrs. Shanks testified before the coroner's jury that she always thought Clara was in Wolf creek falls, they never looked for her there, and at 2 o'clock gave up the search. No neighbors had been called in, and at an early hour the family retired as usual. Next morning at 5 o'clock Mrs. Shanks called her son Daniel and told him that she had dreamed all night of seeing Clara strangling in the pool at the foot of Wolf creek falls. Young Shanks ran to the pool, which is a half-mile away, took off his clothing and waded in. He found the body in five feet of water, and without making any effort to get it out, he put on his clothing and came back to the house. Taking a neighbor chester Rhoiguu he walked directly over to the Kellers' front gate and called Daniel Keller to the door.

"Clara is Drowned in Wolf Creek Falls and you caused it," exclaimed the enraged man. He threw up his gun and fired twice at Keller, who was standing in the door, but owing to his nervousness the shot was too low, burying itself in the door sill. Keller sprang back and his wife came back, begging young Shanks to desist. A neighbor, James Rice, appeared and took Shanks home. The community was aroused, and the lifeless body was taken from the pool to the Shanks home. Coroner Young of Fountain county, assisted by Dr. A. L. Spitzinger of Wallace, made a hasty examination, and returned a verdict of suicide by drowning. The same day Daniel Keller went to Rockville and swore out a warrant charging Dan Shanks for an unprovoked assault. Deputy Sheriff McLain proceeded to the scene to arrest Shanks, but upon his arrival found the home surrounded by a mob of 300 excited men, who informed the sheriff that if he arrested Shanks they would hang Keller. The sheriff took in the situation and returned his warrant unserved.

Clara Shanks was buried in the old Zackmire cemetery the next day, but the public was not satisfied. The suspicion was so strong against Keller that there was danger of mob violence, so the family left their own residence and have since lived with their brother George, across the Wolf Creek line. A vigilance committee was organized and began holding secret meetings at an old schoolhouse just east of Grange Corner. It became the universal verdict of the settlement that Clara Shanks was murdered and afterward thrown into the pool, which is some 40 by 20 feet, with five and six feet of water the year round.

Ten days after the burial a post-mortem examination was ordered, seven competent physicians chosen from both Fountain and Parke counties doing the work. They found several heavy bruises about the head, a congested state of the brain, with an entire dislocation of the head at the base of the skull. The larynx and lungs were free and there were no signs of strangling. A careful examination disclosed the fact that the dead girl had no cause for secret shame, which had been the basis for all suicidal theories. The unanimous verdict of the seven physicians was: "We find that Clara Shanks met her death by violence, cause unknown."

The weight of the evidence brought out by Attorney McCabe and the Kellers was to fix the murder of Clara on her own family. They all stated that they believed the girl had been murdered, but by whom they did not know. It was held that the Shanks family located the body entirely too easy not to know something of the affair over there. The dream of Mrs. Shanks was thought to be too realistic to come from a sleeping brain. Also the Kellers testified to having seen young Shanks cross the field to the Wolf Creek thicket twice during the afternoon, once on a run, and at night all retired as though nothing had happened.

Here is a strange mystery resta. Attorney Thomas says there is evidence which cannot be given out yet, but will come out soon. The Shanks, the Kellers, the citizens of Wallace freely ask all cry for justice, and all firmly believe right will be soon thrown on the dark plot. No more fitting place in all Parke or Fountain counties could have been found for such a deed than this weird place called Wolf Creek Falls. The entire valley is a book of romance and mystery. Named by the red man Wolf creek, it has come down loaded with legends. More Indian relics have been found here than any place in the country. Indian Kettles can be seen at every turn in the rocky gorge, while an old Indian grave is to be found on the high cliff overlooking the falls. Last Sunday 500 persons visited the scene of the tragedy, and one week before 700 persons drove down the hollow to look at the pool where the body of Clara Shanks was found. The interest grows as the case is being unraveled.

Mansfield's Ideas.

Richard Mansfield, the actor, says: If I were called to the throne of America, I should establish as many delightful public gardens and places of entertainment as possible. I should set every unemployed man to work upon the streets and highways and parks, which at present impress me as a disgrace to any civilized nation. I should bestow upon the wealthy men of the country recognized and established positions and encourage them by every means in my power to build castles and palaces and to gather sculptors and painters and writers. I should establish a great gallery of art. I should have a royal residence in New York and a vast park, which should be open to the public. I should run all railroads under the supervision of the government, and place a law prohibitive of any thoroughfare crossing other than over or under a railroad track. I should not permit the United States mail to be carried by any other than a United States vessel. I should establish a brilliant court, at which all distinguished men and all honest men, regardless of pecuniary standing, should at all times be welcome. I should welcome foreigners with open arms, but I should confiscate half the fortune of any heiress who married out of the country.

South Dyspepsia.

A writer in Modern Medicine asserts that "south dyspepsia is coming to be a very common disorder. It has further," he says, "been repeatedly demonstrated that a decayed tooth is frequently the starting point of a pyaemic process, and it has also been shown that the mouth contains various germs may find entrance to the body through cavities in decaying teeth. It must not be forgotten also that these cavities are the favorite habitat of many pathogenic microbes, which, feeding upon the debris of retained food, speedily develop and through increase in number acquire the ability to overcome the resistance of the body."

John Allen, of Pittsburgh, when ten years old, was bitten by a dog. That was eighteen years ago. In the early part of every July, since then, he has violent symptoms of hydrophobia, which endure for about four days.

ENGLAND ONLY HALF CRAZY.

Wheeling Not So Much of a Fad Abroad as It Is in the United States.

"Bicycling is not nearly so much of a craze in England as here; and the reason therefor, as I figured it out after much interested investigation, is illustrative of a notable difference between the United States and England in athletic and sporting matters," said a Wheelman just returned from a transatlantic trip to a New York Sun reporter. "Because of the superb roads to be found in every part of England I expected to find the country simply overrun with bicyclists. But I didn't. Of course there are bicyclists to be met all over the land, but I soon learned that the sport had by no means the general hold on the people disposed to exercise or athletics that it has here. It has taken a comparatively greater hold upon the women than the men, which is entirely consistent with the theory. Here in the United States the growth of bicycling has meant very largely the growth of the habit of taking exercise. We don't go in for sports actively, as the English do. We, as a people, don't play baseball, football, or any other athletic game. We are mightily interested in sports, but mostly in seeing professionals at play in them. Of the twenty thousand people who go to see the three or four big football games in a year how many play football? How many of the ten thousand or more cranks who watch the paid baseball nines ever play the game themselves? Now in England there are actually dozens of football and cricket clubs in every town, and every village and hamlet has its team. They play cricket all summer and football all winter. Every free evening and every Saturday afternoon every bit of turf near a town or village is covered with players of some game or another. Sport is a profession here; it is a pastime there. Here the mass of the people are interested as spectators; there as participants. Bicycling is there only as an alternative means of exercise and amusement; here it is practically the one form of athletics that the whole people take taken to. It's a mighty good thing that something has turned up at last to turn the attention of the nation to healthful exercise and athletics. The bicycle fad will wane after a while, for it isn't an ideal sport, although in many ways an attractive one. But other popular outdoor sport will follow in its wake, and I imagine the bicycle craze will figure as the beginning of an important era in American history.

Latest New York Slang.

"Een a meen-ute" is the latest slang phrase on Broadway, and it comes by way of Coney Island, says the Sun. There is a restaurant there with a row of couches along down there whose accent has interested West Brighton and made his oft-repeated "Een a meen-ute" a catch phrase. When his show place is filled with men who whoop it up and ask, "When is the dance coming?" his invariable reply is, "Een a meen-ute." This pleases the West Brighton denizen so much, and he has ask every other questions to which the reply "Een a meen-ute" may be made. From the source it was brought to town, and now it rages.

FASHION'S FANCIES.

Most women wear some kind of a stock collar.

Scotch tweeds are very fashionable for traveling gowns.

Black and white spotted nets are used for neck ruffles.

Stylish black lace gowns are trimmed with white satin ribbon.

The plainest notepaper and envelopes are now the most fashionable.

Buttons are used chiefly for ornament, except in tailor-made gowns.

Sailor hats, with high crowns and narrow brims, are worn without trimmings.

New cream and white serge suits have the vest and sleeves covered with soutache braiding.

Madagascar curtains are now used to cover wicker dining and parlor chairs, and also to cover pillows.

Blue crepon is light and stylish in appearance, and quite appropriate for this season of the year.

The latest shirt waists are of solid colors, and have white collars and cuffs exactly like those worn by men.

New China silks are soft and cool, and many women prefer this material to all others for summer gowns.

The black and white combination is still fashionable in checks, stripes, small patterns, fancy silks, and satins.

Diamond finger rings are now set in black enamel, as this style of setting is said to enhance the brilliancy of real stones.

Stylish silk dresses have for garniture various accessories of open-patterned white nainsook embroidery and satin ribbon.

A dainty blouse waist of silk or cotton, with a skirt of tweed, serge, or cheviot, makes the most comfortable and practical traveling dress.

The white suck suits are better made and more elaborate than those of last summer, and some have all the style that comes from being tailor-made.

The summer girl in the country must have white shoes, in spite of the expense, and kid, canvas and enameled leather are the materials in vogue.

Gowns of Scotch plaid taffeta, light in color, are made with wide and skirts alike, and trimmed on the bias with velvet of a dark color and ecru linen embroidery.

UNTOLD MISERY FROM RHEUMATISM

C. H. King, Water Valley, Miss., cured by

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For five years, I suffered untold misery from inflammatory rheumatism. Tried every known remedy, consulted the best physicians, visited Hot Springs, Ark., three times spending $500 there, but got no relief, until at last would obtain only temporary relief. Mr. Reed was wasted away so that I weighed only eighty pounds, my left ankle and knee were drawn out of shape, the muscles being twisted up in knots. I was unable to dress myself, and for months I was not conditionally bedridden. Ayer's Sarsaparilla had no appetite, and could not sleep. Many times I was given up to die, and friends and neighbors were so sure of my death that they would not watch with me. I had become a mere bundle of misfortune, and believed myself in reality, so suffering as I was, that I could not live. Happily, I still had one friend who urged me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I began to take it, and from that hour I began to improve. Inside of two months I was able to get around without a cane. In three months more I was entirely restored, and in the course of the year I was cured. My weight has increased full fifty pounds, and I am now a well man."

Cycling 324 Miles a Day.

It seems almost incredible that a man should be able to cover a distance of 324 miles in twenty-four consecutive hours, furnishing all the motor power himself, and yet that was what the French bicyclist, Riviere, did at Bordeaux Tuesday. Applied in a straight line that distance would have carried him from Chicago to the pretty city of Cleveland. Of course, he made his record on a cement track, but it isn't every day that a man can do his twenty-two miles on a track in an hour, not to mention keeping it up for twenty-four. The French, by the way, while they don't keep with us in short-distance cycling, seem to have every other man his own way in the long ones, the American twenty-four-hour record being some 100 miles lower than theirs.

K&K·DRS·K&K·DRS·K&K·DRS·K&K SINFUL HABITS IN YOUTH

LATER EXCESSES IN MANHOOD

MAKE NERVOUS, DISEASED MEN

THE RESULT of ignorance and folly in youth, overexertion of mind and body, indiscretions of maturer years, or the transmission of a destructive taint. Nervous Debility, with its numerous train of unmanly symptoms, is the most terrible affliction that ever befell mankind, because it is the most universal. Thousands of middle-aged men find themselves its victims without understanding the cause of their declining health. Others reach maturity but fail to realize or comprehend their shortcomings. Hence the singular fact that the records of our institutions are filled with applicants for treatment for all the ailments that follow in the train of this destroyer of manhood, while the statistics of our hospitals, sanitariums and infirmaries show that the number of deaths from Consumption, Insanity, Epilepsy, Locomotor Ataxia, Paralysis, Kidney and Bladder Diseases, and all the various forms of Nervous Prostration, are largely due to the destructive habits of youth. Therefore the importance of the subject to the individual and to the race at large cannot be overestimated.
