PLANTS THAT SPREAD QUICK.

The Russian Thistle Has Done Great Injury to Crops.

The dandelion is not an old-world flower, not a native of America, save far to the north and on some of the highest of our western mountains, says St. Nicholas. But somehow it was brought here, perhaps from England in old colonial times. Now we see its golden heads and feathery balls at every grassy roadside, the "clocks" the boys and girls blow to tell the hour. A few years ago farmers in the north west found a new weed, a vile, prickly weed, in their fields of wheat. In very short time this weed, the Russian thistle, has spread over wide acres of the best farm land in that part of the country and has done great injury to the crops. How do these plants spread so fast and so far? They are not carried about and planted. No one would be so foolish as to sow thistles. The mother-plant must have ways of her own for sending her offspring abroad into the world. Plants propagate themselves in two ways—from seed, or from roots. Sometimes these buds are borne on slender runners. A strawberry-plant, after it has blossomed, begins to send out such runners, with buds and tufts of green leaves along them. These tufts are at first connected with the parent plant, but later the runners between break away and each bud grows into a new plant. Many grasses, like Bermuda grass and the thimbleberne quick or couch grass, have creeping stems, each joint sending out a bunch of roots below and a bud on the other side. So you try to hoe up such grasses you only make matters worse, for each joint when cut off is ready to form an independent plant. Such grasses spread very fast and soon take possession of the land they get into.

To Stop an Orient Greyhound.

To bring a great ship some at full speed in a straight line is not the work of a minute. To stop the Etruria, whose displacement is 9,600 tons, horse-power 14,321, and speed 20.18 knots an hour, two months and forty seven days are required, and during the process of stopping the ship will forge ahead 2,464 feet, or nearly half a mile.

Winter Time Table.

No trains were taken off by the Great Northern Railway in making up its winter schedule; but changes were made in the leaving time of several of them, the most important being the Pacific Coast train which leaves at 10 a. m., two hours earlier than heretofore, giving closer connections with Eastern Lines than ever before. Direct routes to Montana and Coast points in daylight.

Private Access.

What a blessing to man can hinder our private access to God. Every sinner can build a chapel in his breast, himself the priest, his heart the sacrifice and the earth he treads on the altar.—Jeremy Taylor.

STOP IT NOW!

Stop It Quickly, Just the Same as Dr. Mr. Charles H. Hoffman, of 132 Ten Eyck Street, Jackson.

If you have a pain in your back, stop it. A lame back, stop it! An aching back stop it! Do you want to know how? Let us tell you! In the first place, never try to rid yourself of pain without knowing the cause. The pain of backache has a reason for it. Find out this reason and get after it. Strike cause a stiff blow with the right weapon, and its alliance and ache, will flee like chaff before the wind. To get right down to it, back ache is a confession of disorderly kidneys placed there by nature; listen to his warnings and take up the weapon, strike before pain is reinforced with stiffness that can not be routed by hand of man such as fight's disease. Let us introduce to you this weapon, prove to you its superiority to all others! Here is a blow it strikes:

Mr. Charles H. Hoffman is a fireman on the M. C. R. R., and resides at 132 Ten Eyck Street, Jackson, Mich. He says: "I have suffered for a long time from kidney and bladder disorder which last of all pains rendered me incapable of work. I have been under the care of physicians and discharged from there as cured, but all to no purpose. Finally I began using Doan's Kidney Pills, and I began taking them, with most gratifying results. Within a few days I noticed that my kidneys were greatly are very much improved, and the pain I suffered in my back has entirely left me, my general condition has much improved. I would not like to be without Doan's Kidney Pills, I think others should know what a valuable remedy it is."

CHAPTER XII.

DEAR FELICIE.—Are you here?"

A shuddering sob, sounding dry, was his answer. He stooped down, lifted up the board flooring, and then taking her in his arms, as he would have carried a helpless babe, descended the narrow ladder leading into the subterranean chamber, which his forethought had provided. He laid her down on a mattress, but comfortable bed, and hurried back to close the door and replace the flooring. That secured, he lighted a candle standing ready on the rude table, poured out a glass of wine, and approached her.

"Try this first, and then tell me if you are injured, dearest child."

She looked up mutely into his face. "Oh, Emile, Emile, my mother is dead!"

His face writhed in overmastering anguish.

"I know it, my child. God help us! I was present at the horrible moment. I discovered that a body of men had left Frejus in that direction, and hurried after them. If I had only known this was to be the wedding night, I should have been there before. As it was, when I came, it was too late. We fought them desperately, and drove them off for a time—but I believe it was a useless victory. Felicie, my child, my child, too, my child, I was sure I saw your white face lying by the counter, but when I returned to the dreadful scene, I found no trace of you. Then I knew that you had fled. I feared that they had carried you off, but a wild hope also led me to seek you here. Heaven be praised that you are spared!"

"And my mother, my mother!" moaned Felicie.

"Be comforted, my dear child, as I was—there was no sign of violence, and the bleeding marring those sweet features might have killed her. She is secure now from all these terrors which we are left to face."

"She has complained of her heart, yes, I thank Heaven, their vile touch did not send that pure soul to heaven," murmured Lady Felicie, weeping piteously. "Oh, I am all alone, alone!"

"My child, you must be calm; I will try to be father and mother both—the love I bore the sainted dead, is doubly yours. Other perils are still about us. I shall need your courage to help me."

She wiped away her tears, and laid her hand trustingly in his.

"I will do my best mon pere Emile."

He turned away to hide the tears which came swelling into his eyes at these touching words, and said huskily:

"I must go back to the chateau before that ruffian band return with augmented strength. We will secure all valuables possible, that they may not believe we were there only to plunder and pillage. And we will need clothing; can you tell me where to find it?"

She gave him brief directions, and added anxiously:

"But if they return, and overpower you—what will become of me?"

"There is no danger." They must go to Frejus first; my men still hold the chateau. We are a match for them, and cannot recognize us; in an hour's time we shall be safely dispersed. I shall bring what is needed for you, for one cannot tell how long this affair may be here. The bodies are decently interred in the garden, by this time. Have no fear of violence, and try to spare yourself more anguish than is possible. You will be calm and patient while I leave you?"

"I will try. Will the light show?"

"Oh, no; the ventilation comes through the trunk of the hollow beech tree. We need be cautious about smoke; but light, not in the least you would be dreary enough in the dark."

"Thank you; do not delay. Go now."

He left her to a two hours' solitude, but it was not so trying to bear as she had feared. The effects of the great excitement of the terrible scene through which she had passed had left her brain numb and torpid. Sitting down by the couch, with her head leaning against the pillow, she dozed away the time, and started to her feet in the vague alarm of sudden awakening from sleep, when Emile again descended from the trunk of the hollow
